Rigoletto Given Last Night at Opera House Brilliant Success-Nancy Wynne Tells a Little About the Work for the Blind-Engagement of Interest

WE MAY laugh at the old operas and I say why not give us the new. But have you ever noticed the smile of satismetion that comes over the face of the regular operagoer, when the duke sings "La Donna e mobile" or Rigoletto starts his famous duct with Gilda, have you? Well, all you had to do was to look around the great opera house last night and sense he broad grins on the faces of those who knew the old tunes, and if you looked very hard you saw that some feet were keeping time, and there were thrills of horror when poor old Rigoletto opened the bag and sund his daughter inside, instead of the tuke, just as there always are,

The audience, as a whole, was most enthudastic and there were thunders of braves from the ever-effervescent gallery. Between the second and third acts as usual the grand tier occupants walked outside. Mr. Stotesbury was in his box and Hope Cronwell was with him. He was greeting and being greeted by many, having but jately returned from the South. I do not think I have ever seen Mrs. John Hampton Barnes look as stunning as she did. She had on a wonderful gown of various shades of erchid silk and tulle, with draperies of tuile that fell from the iders, and she certainly looked queenly. Mrs. James Francis Sullivan also looked charming. I have never seen a woman who kept her looks and figure as she has; positively, she was as young as Frances, who was with her and who wore a charming frock of flesh-colored satin and silver and tulle.

There were a number of officers in the bexes and many in the orchestra. Cecile Howell Rowland wore a perfectly stunsing gown of brilliant green. She had with her in the box Katharine Kremer Page, Marion Fowle Sturgis and Mabel Norris Dickson. How the girls who came out that season (about six years ago) have stuck together? They were one of the pret-Best bunches for many years, and they have certainly kept their beauty, haven't

THE Chapin Memorial Home for Aged Blind, at 6713 Woodland avenue, has ence more come to my attention, for the Matinee Musical Club is going to give its annual concert at the Normandie, Thirtysixth and Chestnut streets, for the benefit of the home tomorrow night. That is, the philanthropy committee of the music club.

The home, I think I have told you of it, shelters aged men and women who are blind and all on voluntary contributions. There is a board of governors and an auxliary committee of ladies, which is headed by Mrs. William Henry Woodward, who, as you know, is blind herself.

But, indeed, I doubt if many who have their eyesight do as much for others as Mrs. Woodward does. She knits for the Red Cross, she sews for the orphans and oldiers; indeed, she does all her own sewing, too. In fact, when I went out to see her quite recently she was hemming a napkin far better than I with my two good eyes would have been able to do. And this by the sense of touch, which has become uisite by constant practice.

It was simply wonderful! There was not a corner in her apartment that Mrs. Woodward did not know of. And where everything was in each place. She told me berself that she arranged her cut glass and china always, because maids never put it just in the places she wanted it. And an assure you it was beautifully ar-

THERE'S another matter in which she ser to us, and that is, she is a member of a committee of sixty women who oughout the entire winter have been soing once a week to the Pennsylvania litution for the Blind, in Overbrook, to hear lectures and to study the best ways to help the blind soldiers when they come

Third Federal Reserve District. It is wonderful the amount of work Mrs. Altenum is doing for the Government in addition to the many interests she is carrying on for the welfare of the soldiers and sallors from the Falls of Schuylkill. In no other section of Philadelphia have the service men been so well cared for. Down in an isolated camp there were about 200 in an isolated camp there were about 200 men lacking the many essential blessings in the shape of reading matter, amusements and music which the Y. M. C. A. is striving to send to all the men. Among the number were five Falls boys. They made known their desire for music to Mrs. Altemus and the citizens' patriotic committee, and an organ will be sent from this section.

I leaned back lazily on my arms. What was I leaned back lazily on my arms. What was I leaned back lazily on my arms. What was I lead to? I saw it all as if it were here before me. The nickel alarm clock on my bureau huzzed I lumped up aractive. Stuffed it under my pillow. Just five minutes more, I dozed. I waked with a jerk—7.15.1 had overslept. I pulled back my crumpled sheets. Too late! I must so without my bath I dressed hurriedly—nervously, pulling off a button here using a safety pin in its place My room is small but neat. One window—a bureau of oak—one chair. Hurry, hurry, hurry, I am on my way to the office. Nine oclock, I slip into the office quietly. "Goodmorning, Miss Lane." "Good morning, Miss Morris." Mail—dictation—and the clatter-clatter, clatter of my typewriter. Another day and I am the well-oiled machine running smoothly on its cogs.

And now? Of course I had been daring But wasn't this worth it? I know my whole year will not be made up of house-parties and play. For I am working still. But it is a work that shall be worth while. This game will take knowledge, cleverness, subtlety. I am on the path of the first!

As I turned the water on in my sunken tub. I said anew my resolutions. This game shall be played to a finish. No lien My experience of last evening was a good leason.

I was bathed. I dressed myself in a fresh white linen. Made so simply that no one could guess that it was made by me. Price of material, $3.46, including buttons.

I went downstairs to breakfast. Wilfred Hall was there before me. He was good to look at in white ducks and white shirt. And I felt I, too, fitted into the picture.

"Let's play together this morning," he suggested, as we left the dining room together.

"Shall it be golf, tennis or a swim?" he asked as we looked over the sunny expanse of green lawns.

"Tennis," I said at a hazard. "Rut you will have to teach me." Wilfred Hale knew how, too. He showed me how to hold my racquet. How to serve, "You'll have a good serve," he said after a few trials. So my five years at a typewriter had given me a strong supple wrist.

As we were volleying, I saw Captain Donovan and the blue-eyed "Fee" coming toward us over the grass. How should I meet him? Coolly, frankly, or naturally? I had only a moment to decide.
