Indoor Horse Show at First City Troop Armory on May 2, 3 and 4—Nancy Wynne Has Other Things to Tell

How the year does fly around! Here skillern has been in the service for a year and received his commission last September, while serving as regimental surgeon with week in May; that is, on May 2, 3 and 4. Now May seems a great way off, does it not? But before you know it it will be here and we'll be trotting up to Twentythird and Chestnut streets to the First City Troop Armory to see the show which has grown to be an annual institution.

The committee of the indoor show this year includes Mrs. Gardner Cassatt, Mrs. William J. Clothier, Jr., Mrs. John Cooke Hirst, Mrs. John P. Hollingsworth, Mrs. William S. Newcomet, Mrs. William C. Warden, Miss Laura Carnell, Mrs. Herbert Lincoln Clark, Mrs. I. W. Hollingshead, Mrs. George Peterson, Miss Mae Stokes, Mrs. Charles Codman, Mrs. Wilmer Krusen, Mrs. John M. Patterson, Mrs. Joseph Rogers, Mrs. Merrill Weeks and Mrs. Edwin H. Vare. Mrs. Walter C. Hancock is chairman. -

Some of us wondered if it would be decided not to have the show this year on account of the war. But it was not to wonder long, for my goodness! aren't some of the hospitals to be beneficiaries and don't the hospitals need every bit of help they can get these days?

Gracious knows, some are already receiving our men from this side if not from the other yet. For so many who have not been used to so much outdoor exposure have been taken very ill from all sorts and kinds of various causes; so more power to any undertaking that helps the hospitals, say I.

The shows have always been given at the Third Regiment Armory, but this year Judge Martin, who is custodian of the First City Troop building, has consented to turn it over to the show, and you will admit that it is certainly far more conveniently located than down at Broad

R. Penn Smith will be, as heretofore, master of the ring. Indeed, I don't be Have we could hold a show unless Mr. Smith had something to do with it, so indispensable does he seem on such occa-

I believe the committee will tell the beneficiaries' names in a few days, then I'll pass it on, of course.

THIS afternoon at the Independence Square Red Cross Auxiliary we are going to have Warden McKenty, of the Penitentiary. He is going to tell us a great deal about his men and about the things they have done for the soldiers since the war started. I have always wanted to hear him and, believe me, I am glad of this opportunity.

Then in the evening there will be the address by Major Garrett, of the Midvale Steel Works and Ordnance Department, who is going to address the Women Writers' Club at their rooms at the Art Alliance Building. Believe me, Nancy will have some busy day, for she certainly wants to go to both.

T FIND it wonderfully interesting, having just read a criticism of Demetra Vaka's new book on Greece, to learn that this same Demetra Vaka, in other words Mrs. Kenneth Brown, is coming to Philadelphia today and will be the guest of Dr. and Mrs. L. Webster Fox. And what is more, she will make an address tomorrow morning at the Ritz-Carlton. Mrs. Fox has been having a series of talks by various prominent persons on internationalism and the last scheduled one took place last week, so this talk is to be a special one.

Brown was born in Con stantinople and her parents were among the most distinguished Greeks in that country. She married an American, young Kenneth Brown, of Virginia, but has gone back to her home on many occasions.

She does not speak as an onlooker, there fore, because she is not an onlooker; she is of the Greek nobility. On the contrary, in her book, which has only recently been published, she tells of her talks with King Constantine and with Venizelos and other important Greek statesmen which are truly marvelous. So there is little doubt that tomorrow's talk at 11:15 o'clock will prove a most interesting thing.

I HAVE told you about small Emily and how she counted among her sweethearts George Washington and her grandfather. Well, Emily, being now five years and about two months old, was invited to attend a dancing class with a little girl several years older. The little girl and her mother came for Emily, who, muchly washed and dressed, accompanied them to her very first party.

That night when Daddy came home he asked her how she enjoyed the class. "Oh, very much indeed; and please get me right away a silk bag and a pair of dancing slippers to go in it," replied Miss Gol-

Poor father! Mother laughed and said, "If you did but know, this is only the beginning!"

Out on the porch, her dear little voice trilling in through the window, Emily remarked, "There was a sweet boy there, Daddy, but he did not dance with me," So perhaps she's not quite so grown up, after all. Later in life she won't be boasting shout those who do not dance with her, NANCY WYNNE.

ord. Fifteen remarkable or have died while in the service in this country and abroad.

Although the task of completing the war record is difficult, good progress is being made by H. P. Lippincott, secretary of the general alumni association. It is hoped to have the record well in hand before the summer recess.

Four thousand names aiready have been registered by Mr. Lippincott at the office of the Alumni Register, the monthly publication of the association. Many more are being added daily. Three thousand names have been gathered and published by Edward R. Bushneil, editor of the Pennsylvania Gazette, the weekly magazine of the University.

GREAT RECORD MADE BY STATE RED CROSS

Two and a Quarter Million Surgical Dressings Produced in February, is Report

The Red Cross workers of the Pennsylvania division announce that 2,250,000 surgical dressings were made by them during the short month of February and, as there are thirteen other divisions engaged in the same work, it is safe to say that at least 25,000,000 dressings were made during that month.

It is probable that the new dressings order just given the Red Cross by the surgeon general of the United States army is a result of this record. These dressings are not to displace other dressings made by the Red Cross, but are of a special sort to meet special needs of the army. This makes the Red Cross a body under definite orders than a mere volunteer organization.

Preparations CHAPTER XX

THE mail brought me a letter today. A different letter, with thick, creamy white paper. I stared long at the envelope guessing, speculating.

At last monther said, "Why don't you open it, Sara? Then you'll know who wrote it." It was from James Meric. I liked the way he wrote, very black and scrawly. I could feel his personality in the strong way he crossed his "I's."

It said:
"Dear Miss Lane.
"Tve discovered a new and fascinating little restaurant in the nethermost parts of the city. Would you give me the pleasure of dining there with you tonight?" I shall come for you at seven.
"Faithfully,
"JAMES MERLE."

"I shall come for you at seven.
"Faithfully." "JAMES MERLE."
His first letter: I read it. Over and over again. I put it in the pocket of my gingham morning dress. All morning as I did simple little things around the house, dusting, polishing sliver, straightening a picture, I could feel his letter give a little friendly crinkle in my pocket.

I must bend every energy on looking well tonight. Everything will do except my hat. That is passe. It looks as if it had spenrs a long hard summer. It is my one and only hat. It is too early for a velvet one. What shall I do? I walked upstairs to the storeroom. There stood the old hat trunk. One after another I pulled them out. Old and hattered each seemed worse than the last Then I had an inspiration. My black Milan of last year, and my black horse-hair of three seasons ago.

I carried them down triumphantly to my room. There mother found me, sitting on the floor with two dismantled hats, and my idea. Mother looked puzzled. "Would my purple asters help you?" she asked. and my main recording to the control of the control hid the joining. It had an air!

"You have changed, Sara," mother said with a sigh. But she would say so more.

I lay down in the afternoon. I tried to sleet, In vain. I had hazy, fascinating pletures of James Merle—and me. I could see the dimly lighted restaurant. Our corner, this eyes on mine across the table. The savory smell of food. Perhaps at the end he would light a cigarette. Lean back and regard me through lazily moving blue rings. At this point I sat up. I could not sleep. It was 5 o'clock anyway. I might as well dress myself.

Never before have I known what fun it

Never before have I known what fun it is to dawdle over my dressing. To brush and brush my hair. To rub my checks until they are rosy. they are rosy.

At last I was dressed. I surveyed myself from well-polished toe to my "new" hat. Yes. I would do. Just a touch of rose perfume and I was ready.

and I was ready.

The clock struck seven! I am putting on my gloves. My heart beats fast, as I hear footsteps pass the house. A taxi whires by. Is it he? It is 7:15. I sit down and try to read—the words blur before my eyes. The bell rings. My breath comes in a little catch. Only the laundry. Suppose he does not come? For the first time I think he might not. 7:45. No sign. My face is burning red. Is he coming?
