He heard nothing. Safe? They must be. The Yellow Dove, mounting easily, had cleared the trees at the border of the farm...

In front of her Cyril lay back in his seat. His hands clasped the sides of the couch. "I God! she had not been sure before that his sudden lassitude meant he had been hit."

She kept her gaze before her over Cyril's head, trying to gain strength for what she had to do, thinking that she was in England—at Ashwater Park...

Before her the sun was setting blood red in a sea of amber. She mounted above it into the starry emptiness of a higher—higher yet. She felt the exhilaration of large spaces...

The mountains had fallen below them and the horizon had widened until it blurred into the distance. She looked down on what seemed to her a plain of purple velvet touched with silver patches...
