THE QUESTION OF MEN'S FASHIONS

TORD Chesterfield, in praising a noted old-time London tailor, once remarked that if he were shipwrecked on an island with only a sail cloth, he would turn it into a garment of fashion and distinction.

Very apropos just now are these words of over a century ago. For never has true creative skill in the styling of clothes counted for so much as today-when the lack of it can no longer be disguised by wasteful frills and a spendthrift use of woolens.
