GOSSIP OF THE STREET

U. S. FIRST LIBERTY LOAN BONDS APPROACH PAR

New Issues Sold and Delivered on Floor of Exchange—Railroad Speculation Drops. Gossip of the Street

A PECULIAR feature in bond trading on the floor of the stock exchange is reported from New York. Notice had been given to the members of the exchange a few days ago that no trading would be permitted in the new 4¼s until formal authorization had been given. This order, it seems applied only to transactions calling for delivery on the day following. Several members, however, appeared on the floor with bonds of various denominations in their pockets, which they sold at the same price as they are being sold by the Government and delivered them on the spot. It is claimed that this is the first time bonds have been sold on the exchange and delivered immediately.

It was said in this column not very long since that the time was not very distant when the Liberty 3½ tax-free bonds would command a premium. In the opinion of some bankers and brokers that time is almost here. Wealthy men, it is said, have been taking all offered recently and the price has advanced to within a fraction of par.

Investment bankers in Philadelphia predict a renewed interest in issues of corporate bonds just as soon as the present Liberty Loan campaign is over. It is said that several houses are waiting to submit a number of new issues to the capital issues committee of the Federal Reserve Board when the campaign ends, and in fact it is understood that a number of these issues are already being considered by the committee. Most of these issues are said to be for short-term notes, which will be marketed at very attractive prices.

Speculation in Railroad Securities at Minimum

Railroad securities have ceased to attract the speculative element for some time past. Since earnings are guaranteed by the Government and are limited, no matter what the volume of business transacted, the only thing that remains to affect the situation is the limitation of the purchasing power of the earnings as prices increase. The speculator gambles as a rule on futures, but when the future is a certainty, as it is in the case of the railroads, there is no opportunity for speculation.

* * *

There seems to be some difficulty in arriving at a satisfactory contract for the railroads between the counsel representing the railroads and counsel for Director General McAdoo. The document drawn up for this purpose by Mr. McAdoo's advisers reached the financial district in New York this week and is said to be not quite satisfactory to the railroad men, who are reluctant to express opinions openly, but enough was gathered to indicate that they did not consider the document as liberal in its terms as the railroad act created by Congress.

Why Railroads Do Not Buy Liberty Bonds

In answer to the question why railroads do not subscribe for Liberty Bonds as a possible reason why the third Liberty Loan is lagging, Alfred H. Smith, president of the New York Central Railroad, asks the public to realize that the railroads have been taken over by the Government, and in turn he puts the questions:

"Would the Postoffice Department subscribe for Liberty Bonds? Would the Agricultural Department? Would the Navy Department?"

Another reason why the railroads are not subscribing is that at present none of them knows what its contract with the Government is going to be, as the Government may control the disposition of all its income.

Some of the roads are not making operating expenses, while others are seeking loans from the Government instead of being in a position to loan to it. It is said, however, that some of the coal companies which are subsidiaries to the railroads have made large subscriptions to the present loan.

Federal Tax Payments in Installments

The legislative proposal contained in what is known as the Pomerene bill, permitting the payment of Federal income and excess-profits taxes in installments, is opposed by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, who in a lengthy telegram to Governor Strong, of the New York Federal Reserve Bank, on Thursday gave his reasons in detail.

The Secretary says the agitation in favor of such legislation is doing much harm. He calls attention to the war-revenue act of October 3, 1917, which authorized the payment of these taxes by installments in advance, and draws attention to the provision to facilitate this operation by the issuance of certificates of indebtedness which would be accepted in payment of these taxes.

But the most important part of his reply is contained in the following paragraphs:

"To permit the deferred payment of the income and excess-profits taxes would necessitate the issue in June of Treasury certificates to a prohibitive amount, and the Treasury Department cannot, therefore, recommend to Congress the amendment to the existing law which requires the prompt payment of these taxes in June.

"The Treasury cannot finance the requirements of the war if only Treasury obligations are to have definite maturities. The June tax payments can be made, I am certain, without embarrassment or serious inconvenience to taxpayers, and that they should be paid promptly when due is of the utmost importance to the country. We should make up our minds to pay these taxes when due and get the business behind us. To defer them until the fall, when another Liberty Loan will have to be issued, will add new complications to the situation.

"I earnestly hope, therefore, that further agitation may cease and that every one will co-operate in the patriotic determination to do his duty in the payment of taxes at the time that duty ought to be performed."

BEAR STARS OF GOLD IN NEW YORK PARADE

Crowds Hush as Service Flags Show Sacrifice to Country

New York, April 27.

A human wave rolled up Fifth avenue yesterday in the Liberty Day win-the-war parade. The parade consisted of four divisions.

Every uniform of the United States and all the Allies was represented in the parade—worn not only by soldiers and sailors on the verge of real service, but by wounded men from Pershing's army, survivors of the torpedoed ship Jacob Jones and graybeards from the Civil War. On floats navy yard workmen were seen at work, ripping steel plates with sputtering torches. There were sixty-two trade divisions, with clerks and bankers, mechanics and bosses. Two dirigibles sailed overhead against a perfect day and dropped Liberty Loan literature on the multitude of watchers.

In the last division were "the women entitled to wear service flags," the mothers or wives or sisters of men who have gone to the front. Everybody along the avenue waited for them. One knew of their coming by the cheers and hand-clapping that rippled northward and reached the public library at Forty-second street and Fifth avenue, where the reviewing stand was located, before they were in sight. There were about 8000 of them.

In automobiles, in the place of honor at the head of the column, rode two placid housewives, one of them smiling from a mourning veil. They were Mrs. William Quinn, of Great Neck, L. I., and Mrs. Louis Rosenberg, of North Bergen, N. J. In the white rectangle in the center of the little red flag that each held aloft were six stars, which meant that each of these American mothers had sent six sons to the front.

No other mothers in the parade had a record like that, although three and four stars were fairly common. On at least half a dozen service flags was a gold star denoting that a relative had been killed in action.

The most interesting problems of business will be woven into the story of Peter Flint.

LXXIV

MIKE sure was peeved today. He told me yesterday that he wanted to see a big ball game in Boston, and he was going to try to find some way of getting off.

All yesterday he kept complaining to the old man how sick he felt, but the old man never rose to the bait. Early this morning he got near the old man and groaned audibly. The old man glowered at him and said, "Stop that noise."

"I'm sorry, sir," said Mike, in a faint voice, "but I feel sick."

"Well, work's the best thing for that. Hurry now and take those flatirons to the stockroom."

Mike gave him a reproachful glance, but the old man turned his back. Whereon Mike expressed his opinion emphatically by sticking out his tongue, squinting and waggling his fingers from the end of his nose.

Mike didn't give up then, however, for when he came downstairs he said to Mr. Minton, "I think I know what's upsetting me, sir. You see, my uncle, who's always been so good to me since my father died, is taken sick, and I'm afraid, sir, I'm worrying about him so much that I'll be laid up if I can't go and see him."

"Where does your uncle live?" said Minton, suspiciously.

"He lives in Watertown, sir. That isn't far from here. I could get back from there in a couple of hours."

"So you could. Well, we'll get the store closed at six tonight, and you'll have plenty of time to go down and see him before you go to bed."

"Oh, Mr. Minton, if my uncle is as sick as I think he is, he may be dead by that time!"

"In that case, Mike, I think you are much better where you are. You are too young to be harrowed by death-bed scenes."

Gravely as the old man spoke, I noticed a twinkle in the corner of his eye.

"Now get busy with your work. That's the best cure for your complaint. I have to leave the store for a few minutes, but Mrs. Minton will be here before long."

In a woe-begone way Mike lifted his eyes to the ceiling, but he forgot to be sick at the sight of the old man leaving the store.

"What do you think of that?" he asked me. "There is the original mean man. He eats mud every night so he'll keep gloomy, I tell you, Peter, our boss has an ingrowing hatred of himself, and it hurts him worse than an ingrowing toenail. Do you know, Peter, old cock, that man is so mean that he is actually growing a wart on the back of his neck so he can save a collar button? Gosh! how I do hate him!"

"You couldn't slip a tale like that over on him," said I. "Any one could see you were putting up bunk."

"Do you think so?" said Mike, a little bit worried.

"Sure! If you had wanted to go to the ball game, why didn't you ask him if he would let you have an afternoon off to go?"

"Wouldn't that jar the cherries on your mother's bonnet?" said Mike. "Do you know, Peter, I never thought of that? Maybe that's the reason the old codger wouldn't let me go." All of a sudden Mike switched around and stooped to the ground, and I heard his voice saying, "Give me one where it will do the most good."

For fun, I gave him a good bump with my knee. He sprawled full length on the floor and——

"Upon my word!" came Mrs. Minton's voice from the doorway. "Is this how you boys look after the store when Mr. Minton is away? Look at this dust. See—I can write my name in it!"

I knew it was no use arguing, so I started once more dusting. As Mike passed me he said, "Nothing wonderful in writing your name in the dust to these days of public education!"

Business Questions Answered

I was glad to hear your opinion of the man who is difficult to talk with on the telephone. I call him the telephone fog. By the way, do you think it is possible to sell goods over the telephone? H. L.

Not only is it possible, but it is done very successfully by many people. I know a cotton broker who does virtually all his business that way. A certain steel salesman takes the bulk of his orders over the phone. Of course, this happy state of doing business is not arrived at overnight. You cannot do it until the customers know you well and have every confidence in your word and in your judgment.

For four years I have attended night classes in mechanical drawing. I am out of employment and there does not seem to be any demand for this work. Some one told me a machinist before I can get a job in this specialty. Can you give me any information how I can get a situation along these lines, as I intend to follow up my classes next year? W. B.

Call at the machine shops in your locality and tell the operators you want to work for them. The way to get a job is to call on the people who use men who do the work you want to do. Don't wait for some one to tell you that he needs a young man.
