Time for Scouts to Show Something

OUTS for major-league baseball clubs are any good, this is the time m to show something. In the past many clubs have had scouts Ittle besides draw a salary and compose expense accounts. In years the minors have teemed with excellent material and the of major-league managers had so many friends among the minor and players that they really had little need of scouts, although burdens kept the owners of ball clubs full of more or air, the burden of which was that no club could be successful an overpaid scout or so, only they did not mention the overpaid part

Uncle Sam has decided to use a few baseball players in his con Willie Hohenzollern, not only have the ranks of classes of clubs ted, but literally scores of leagues have had to shut down for the of the war at least. This means that major-league talent during few years is going to be exceedingly hard to get. Baseball playall other athletes, are best between the ages of twenty one and so, the draft limits. If this were not the case, Congress would in other age limits between which men are physically the most fit, the problem of the major leagues will be to sort out material comparatively few men who are exempt and who at the same able to put up the brand of baseball necessary to maintain the ndard of the national pastime.

process will have to be done largely by scouts. The scout who is produce now is the man who will make the money and the reputa-able scouts will be in greater demand than able ball players, and oly the days of the loafing scout will come to a close, because if to not produce their rivals are going to get the materia: that they have gotten.

Ping Bodie Will Be Factor in Series

G BODIE'S work with the stick is going to be a big factor in the letics-Yankees series. So far Ping has not hit safely as often as work at the spring training camp indica.ed. However, he has been the ball solidly, and a good deal of his failure may be attributed ill-known bad breaks. Time after time he has come up and cracked I squarely on the nose, only to have it sail fairly into the hands
