CERTAINLY summer is at hand, isn't it? There was the out-of-door fete at the Philadelphia Cricket Club last Saturday for the benefit of Base Hospital No. 10, and then tomorrow every pony and dog and doll in town will have to be dressed up in his or her best, coats brushed, curls waved and fresh bows and smiles. For isn't it going to be the Pony Show day. and isn't that quite enough to make us all try to look our best, be we pony, dog, doll or human?

I do hope 'twill be clear, for how can one go to a pony show in the rain unless, indeed, 'twere an inside show such as the recent Indoor Horse Show. And, by the way, speaking of the indoor show, have you heard that the hospitals realized goodly sum each, that $3400 was added to the ambulance fund and during the three afternoons and nights of the show $73,350 worth of Liberty Bonds were sold? That's some record, is it not? Best they've ever had, they tell me. Then on Thursday there's the suffrage fete at Mrs. Charlie Munn's for the overseas hospital, and so

T DON'T know if you feel as interested as I do about the various war activities of the women, but it really does seem splendid to hear all they are doing. Just lately I have been talking to some of the members of the home service section of the American Red Cross, and the system into which they have got things is simply great. Families of soldiers and sailors living in the outlying districts of the city will now receive help from the Red Cross without the necessity of taking a long trip into town. for the home service section, which has its headquarters at 1607 Walnut street, has moved three of its districts from the main office to localities which will be more convenient for both the workers and the families of the enlisted men. The districts selected were those situated farthest from the center of the city and include West Philadelphia, Northeast and Germantown.

The West Philadelphia district, of which Miss Frances Shaw is supervisor, is now located at Thirty-seventh street and Lancaster avenue, in the West Philadelphia Neighborhood House. The Northeast district, including Frankford, which is in charge of Miss Crosson, occupies what was formerly the waiting room of the Pennsylvania passenger station, at Front and Norris street. The Northwest district has been given two rooms in the Germantown Service House, at 100 West 'Chelten avenue, and attractive luncheons will be served to the workers there daily. Miss Mildred Flanders, assisted by Miss Natalie Kimber, is in charge of this branch.

THE work of the Home Service Section is divided into seven districts, with a trained social worker at the head of each one, assisted by numerous volunteers. At present there are seventy-eight volunteers, who are devoting a large portion of their time to visiting the families of our men in the service.

It often happens when the man of the house is called away to war that the family soon finds itself in desperate straits. not only from financial difficulties, but also on account of the need of sound advice and friendly sympathy. These the Red Cross home service section stand ready to offer at all times, and the relatives of any enlisted and drafted men are urged to take their troubles to them.

If the allotment fails to come or the baby is taken sick or no letters arrive from the men at camp, the Red Cross will gladly do all in its power to clear away the difficulties for the soldier's family

THERE will be a regular grand opera House tomorrow evening, when the great all-star cast is seen in J. Hartley Manners's war play, "Out There," which will be given for the benefit of the American Red Cross. Not even the celebrated songbirds have ever aroused so much interest as has this wonderful company. Think of seeing and hearing Mrs. Fiske, Julia Arthur, George Cohan, Eleanora de Cisneros, Lau-rette Taylor, Chauncey Alcott, Helen Ware. George Arliss and many more theatrical ities in the same cast. The grand tier boxes will be occupied by the major-ity of the lessee, as most of them at-tended the auction sale Friday afternoon and bought them in at high prices. Many of the opera subscribers have also taken their orchestra seats, so the social importoe of the event is already assured. The of patronouses includes Mrs. George T. tier, Mrs. H. P. MORE BABIES' LIVES ARE SAVED BY CITY

Dr. Krusen Says Mortality Is Lower Than Was Expected for

Latest statistics show that Philadelphia's infant mortality rate for 1917 is not so great as at first thought, according to Dr Wilmer Krusen, Director of the Department of Public Health and Charities, who delivered an address yesterday afternoon at the fourth annual meeting of the Babies' Welfare Association of Philadelphia.

ciation of Philadelphia.

"We thought our infant mortality rate for 1917 had Jumped to 110 out of every 1000 bables, from 100 out of every 1000 in 1916," said Doctor Krusen, "but the latest birth registration statistics for the year bring the number up to 42.927 bables born in Philadelphia during 1917, of whom 4617 died before reaching one year of age, making the rate 107 instead of 110 per thousand, as we had thought.

fore reaching one year of age, making the rate 107 instead of 110 per thousand, as we had thought.

"But." he warned. "we have to do lots of work to help the Government save 100,000 baby lives this year, as Philadelphia's quota is 1413 extra bables to be saved."

Doctor Krusen declared nothing could better accomplish this purpose than more health centers in this city and more city nurses to go into homes to instruct mothers in the care of children.

Other speakers at the meeting were Dr. William Duffield Robinson, president of the Bables' Welfare Association; Dr. Harriet L. Hartley, secretary, and Dr. Howard Childs Carpenter, who read a comprehensive report of the executive board's plans and activities.

It was announced that the association was now an incorporated body under the laws of Pennsylvania, the charter, presented by J. Frederick Martin, a Philadelphia attorney, being adopted at the meeting.

The following were named on the board of directors: Dr. William Duffield Robinson, Dr. William N. Bradley, Dr. Howard Childs Carpenter, Dr. Lids Stewart Cogili, Dr. Neva R. Deardorff, Mrs. J. C. CHAPTER LXIII Cousin Madeleine

FOR a week I have been in the empty house. I have scrubbed and swept and cleaned. From cellar to tiny top floor the house is immaculate. It is as my wise old lady said, "You will sweep away the cob-webs, too." For I have wiped out my last But I am so much alone. In the garret this morning I was going through an old trunk. I came on a tiny yellowed mirror. I peared into the misty glass. I was startled. My face is colorless. I saw the slightly hollowed cheeks and the dark rings under my eyes. I studied it then. And turned away with a little shrug of disgust. How plain I look!

Not the vivid girl Doctor Bixby scolded. In a moment my head was down on the trunk. The hard, dry sobs shook me. For what had it all come to? Here I am alone. More than ever deserted in this clean, empty

More than ever deserted in this clean, empty house.

How long I cried I do not know. But at last an insistent knocking made me lift my head. I hurried down the stairs, dabbed some powder on my reddened eyelids, tried to pat my hair in order.

It was the grocer, perhaps—but no, it was the front door. I was just in time. Cousin Madeline steed on the steps. At the curb I saw her blue limousine, with her chauffeur waiting.

"Sara," she cried, when she saw me, "where were you? I've been ringing and knocking furiously!"

"In the garret," I answered. Cousin Madeline kept on in her swift, incessant talk.

"Your mother, where is she?" But she hurried on before I had time to answer. "I've been so husy this summer. Uuests, entertaining. We've done nothing but go—go—But how is it. Sara, you're not at work?" Again hurrying on, "How badiy you look! Are you here alone? Why don't you come down and stay with us? We are quite alone now. Only Mrs. Ashby, you knew her? Judge Ashby's wife."

"But I haven't any clothes. I'd have to shut the house—"

Cousin Madeleine suddenly took things in her own hands. "Clothes—we dress very simply at Longue View. I'll have my man come and close up for you. Now no excuses. I'll expect you a week from Thursday. The 2:10 is the best train from the I'nnsylvania stallon."

She was gone. I heard the purr of the big car as it spun off. Only the heavy Ortental scent of Cousin Madeleine's perfums hangs on the air.

But—shall I go?

Women in All Walks of Life Urge Senate to Pass Amendment

Women in charge of war work in Phila-delphia and Washington urge the immedi-ate passage of the woman sufrage amend-ment, which is pending in the United States Senate, as a war necessity.

Prominent women in all walks of life are in favor of the bill, it was announced at the local headquarters of the National Woman's party, 213 Penfield Building, and expressions on the matter were given by

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, chairman of women in industry committee of Council of National Defense, says:
"No class in the nation is so legislated for and about as women in industry, yet they have no voice in making the laws that govern them."

they have no voice in making the laws that govern them.

"Two conditions peculiar to the war emphasize the danger and injustice of this fact. Thousands of women have entered industry. This entrance of women and war conditions in general create a tendency to lower standards of work. Women need political power to protect themselves and to protect the standards of the work which they have taken over from men. They will protect the standards of the work which they have taken over from men. They will have no direct influence in industry or in the legislation concerning industry until they have political power. Woman's enfranchisement is an immediate war necessity which will enable her to give and do her best for a more and the standard of the standa

Miss Martha Van Rensselaer, head of home conservation division of the food ad-ministration, declares the duties of govern-ment are resting more and more heavily upon ministration, declares the duties of government are resting more and more heavily upon women. She says:

"Women have added to their housekeeping the responsibility of food conservation, upon which it has more than once been said our victory in the war depends. Other war responsibilities are gradually becoming a part of woman's work until the duties of government are hers, even more than if she were called to the front. To perform these war tasks successfully women should have political enfranchisement, for each woman must have a broad vision of the whole struggle in which she is playing her part. Participation in political work in legislation will give her this vision. Women must be equipped with new power and new tools if they are to meet their new responsibilities effectively."

The National League for Women's Service began to mobilize American women at the declaration of war. Miss Marie L. Obernauer, industrial chairman of the league, speaks for an "army" of working women when she says:

"It takes four men to maintain one fighting man at the front. Just about one man in each of these four is a woman. Why should the fourth 'man' be denied citizenship?

"Women are an integral part of this war, not only a part of the forces far behind the lines, but of the army and navy equipment. Without an assured and stable supply of labor this war cannot be won. Whether we have it or not depends upon women supplying the places of men called into military service.

"Women need authority to discharge their service.

"Women need authority to discharge their new responsibilities. The Federal suffrage amendment by Congress is a recognition which they deserve and require if they are to fulfill the responsibilities the war nas put upon them."
