

Evening Public Ledger

Philadelphia, Saturday, May 18, 1918

YOUNG AMERICA, DEEPLY PATRIOTIC, GIVES VENT TO ITS IMPULSES IN VARIED WAR ACTIVITIES

WHEN GENERAL HUGH L. SCOTT ran his eye up and down the faultless line of the student battalion of the Pennsylvania Military College, at Chester, yesterday afternoon he could not have been other than pleased at the type of youth therein arrayed and at young America's adaptability to military discipline.

IN REVIEWING the cadets of the Pennsylvania Military College General Scott, commandant of the Camp Dix cantonment, was attended by Colonel Reynolds, United States Army instructor at the college.

TIRELESS ARE THE ACTIVITIES of the Boy Scouts, who are now making rope quilts for their elder brothers "over there." Witness Field Executive John Getz, Jr., instructing a couple of sea scouts in the work.

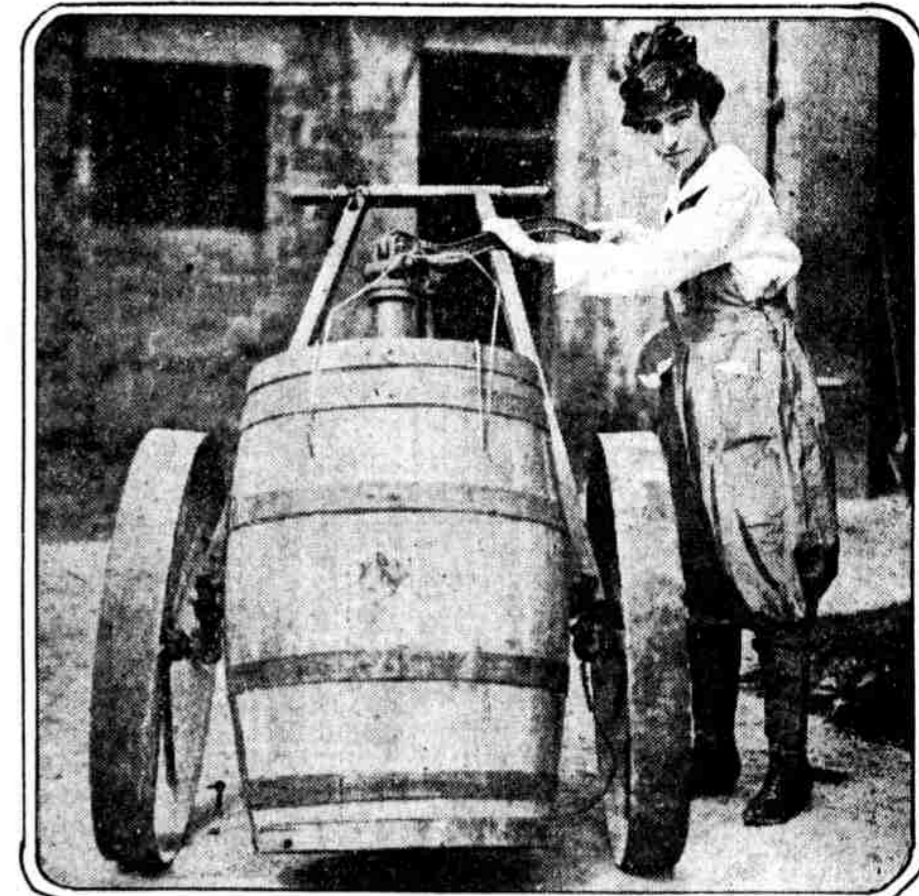

THESE YOUNGSTERS were the idols of the crowd that witnessed the parade of pupils of the H. C. Lee public school late yesterday. Left to right: Francis McKaig, Sylvia Sharp, Robert Reynolds.

THE YOUNGEST OFFICER in the Italian army is Francis Caporale, son of Mr. and Mrs. Adalberto Caporale, of 266 South Twelfth street.

WHEN IT COMES to quantity as well as quality of Red Cross work, the girls of the Sheridan School, at Ontario and G streets, very nearly hold the record, as the above photograph showing the results of their handicraft bears out.

PATRIOTISM EXTENDS even to the spraying of vegetables, with Miss Miriam House, one of the younger farmerettes at Wynnewood, operating the sprayer.

THESE DILIGENT pupils of the Sheridan School are displaying some of the Red Cross work, of which they have ample reason to be proud.