Nancy Wynne Tells of Men and Women's Surgical Dressings Class at Chestnut Hill—She Hears Sergeant Baldock Speak at the Red Cross

WHAT do you think of the surgical dressings class that has been formed out at the Philadelphia Cricket Club? It's a great idea, don't you think? I'm simply dying to know how the men will be dressed up while they work. Will they, think you, cover their curls with linen caps and wear long white aprons with artistic sashes tied at the back in bows?

But really, don't you think it's a very good idea? I do. Why shouldn't the men who for some good reason are not going "over there" help the women to make the dressings for the hospitals? Indeed, a wee Mr. told me that he had heard one woman say to another that she really believed the men did even better work than the women, once they knew how. Be that as it may, they have started in and are to meet every Thursday evening at the Philadelphia Cricket Club. The advisory committee of the class includes Mrs. Arthur Lee, Mrs. E. Walter Clark, Mrs. George Woodward, Henry Kingston and Lynford Biddle. Mrs. Norris Williams is chairman of the committee and Mrs. A. H. Beeve is vice chairman. The other members include Mrs. George Warden, Mrs. Herbert Goodall, Mrs. Barry Colahan, 3d, Mrs. Joe Carpenter, Mrs. Charles Porter, Mrs. Billie Harger, Wilson Sharpless, Joe Jennings, Reed Morgan, John Brown, William Stewart, Jr., Arthur Brockie, Howell Pratt, Frank Phelps and Edward Whitaker.

The first meeting was held last Thursday and every man and woman member of the club is automatically a member of the class. There are 250 in the service, you know, from the Philadelphia Cricket Club, and naturally those at home want to help those "over there."

The men have had little opportunity so far to join in the work which the women have so splendidly carried on for more than a year, and as they are anxious to help, the women are equally anxious to instruct. I believe it will be a success.

AND now Marjorie Mann is going to be a June bride. Of course, you know the Mann girls. They are just as attractive and sweet as they can be. I remember several years ago being much impressed by a young man at the meeting of the Saturday Evening Dancing Class. He was standing talking to me between dances and he suddenly said, "Go! Just look at that Mann girl. Now isn't she just as pretty and as well dressed—in fact, better dressed—than any of the other girls in the room?" I turned and looked at her. I can't remember if it was Marjorie or Ruth, but she had on a simple white frock made on plain but graceful lines and the low neck and tiny sleeves were outlined with narrow wreaths of flowers. She looked sweet and simple and girlish and, yes, there was a certain air of style which many of the girls who were dressed in far handsomer gowns of taffeta or chiffon lacked.

I answered him, "Yes, she does look sweet and well dressed." "That's it," he said. "And she made it all herself and she changes the kinds of flowers for different parties, and all the boys think it's wonderful she makes all her own dresses." "Go!" he added. "She's some girl!" Has he been older he'd probably have said, "She'll make a good wife for somebody."

To return to the wedding date, it has been set for June 5, I suppose after Jack Hirst will have graduated from the Medical School of the U. of Pa.

Doctoring certainly seems to be in the Hirst family, both Jack's father, Dr. Barton Hirst, and his uncle, John Cooke Hirst, for whom he is named, being among this city's most eminent physicians.

His mother was Miss Elsie Graham, a sister of Mrs. Hutchinson Scott, Mrs. Frank Dougherty, Mr. Howard Graham and all of that large family of brothers and sisters.

Marjorie's sisters, Natalie and Alice, married William Pepper Norris and Nelson Huber, respectively.

My best wishes to the happy young pair, and I know you join me in this.

I WENT into the Independence Square Auxiliary Red Cross rooms yesterday afternoon to hear Sergeant Baldock of the Princess Pat regiment, speak to the workers. It was a different kind of talk from those that have taken place there through the winter. It was the talk of a man who had a father's heart and who was not ashamed to let us see it. Not that the other speakers did not have as much heart, but somehow this stood out particularly yesterday.

He told us that when he went into the war his little boy of seven had just died and that he had to leave the little grave in England and go to Belgium and northern France to fight. But that when he saw the little children of France and Belgium, who had gone out wondering perhaps to see what the company of soldiers coming up the street was and had held up their little hands in their little innocent, wondering way and had had their little hands cut right off by the Germans or had been caught through the heart on a bayonet and strung over the wall out of the Germans' way, he was thankful that his little boy was sleeping in his little grave in England.

He was simple and straight out and there were few with dry eyes among those who sat there listening to him. Afterward one of the committee asked him what the red hand stood for on his right sleeve, and he smiled and said that showed that he was in the first year of the war and the red stood for "the contemptible little army of Mons," and when some said they did not know that saying he showed that the Kaiser had been quoted as having spoken of the men who fought so valiantly at Mons as "that contemptible little British army," and said Sergeant Baldock, "I'm prouder of having been in that first fight than of anything else I have done in all my life."

He was gassed and his left lung is dead and he was blind for three months, but the right lung is good and the eyesight in back and is getting better every day. Somehow I feel as glad as he does that it is getting better every day. Those men have surely done their bit. NANCY WYNNE.

EPISCOPAL CLERGY FOR SIMPLER DRESS

Agree With Bishop Lines That Tendency of Women I-Toward Extravagance

While Episcopal clergy of Philadelphia have taken no active steps toward a dress reform movement here, they have expressed themselves as in accord with Bishop Edwin S. Lines, of Newark, to the end that greater simplicity should prevail.

"The tendency of women to outstrip their friends in any line is not a habit to be jaded at any time," said the bishop, "and, seriously, it behooves us all to dress more simply and in more democratic style."

"Bishop Lines' address in Newark was a splendid lesson in women's style, and I hope the women of the Episcopal churches throughout this state will profit by it."

The minister's idea is to foster a greater spirit of democracy among the parishes, so that the less fortunate will not be uncomfortable when they sit in church beside their richer neighbors.

Hunting a Husband

CHAPTER LXIX

The Wrong Lane

I WAS playing with little Anne this afternoon. I had gotten into that habit lately. In all the big, elaborate house there seems no place for her—no me.

My hair was teased. And I had grown long and thick—longer than Hilda's—so I was crawling cautiously across the nursery rug when the door opened. Winthrop Carter entered.

"How pretty you look, Miss Lane," he said. I raised a hand to catch my falling hair. "You did do that, didn't you?"

"I said good-by to little Anne. We left the room. We started down for the dock. And I—"

"You must find this a bore down here," said Winthrop Carter.

"A bore?" I questioned.

"After your own beautiful estate—"

"I thought at first he was making fun of me. One glance showed me he was in earnest. Who did he think was in the room? Madeline Thurlaw's poor cousin, evidently.

"It came to me in a flash. I would test him. "Have you ever seen our estate?"

"Oh, every one that reads the papers knows about Alexander Lane, his house—"

"But, Mr. Carter, you've made a mistake. I am not Alexander Lane's daughter. I am only Cousin Madeline's poor relation!"

I watched his face. Not the slightest flicker of emotion chased across it. The man really cared for me—or he was a master of expression.

"We strolled on, talking of sundry things. Not until evening did I see him again. Then he danced with Mrs. Ashby. Not once did he ask me for a dance. I knew then—"

I stole away quietly up the stairs. No one was the wiser. Only Bennie I met on the landing. He took my hand in such a warm, friendly grip. Somehow he helped my hurt pride by that simple gesture.

Tomorrow—Bennie.

BEES MAY ALLEVIATE SHORTAGE IN SUGAR

Patriotic Women Are Brought to Bring About Greater Production of Honey

Bees are going to be mobilized to make good the shortage in sugar, and patriotic women of Philadelphia are called on to make up the shortage in bees by joining the Bee Club at Ambler.

According to statistics, half the bees in Pennsylvania perished in the cold last winter. The Government, on the other hand, is urging a greater production of honey than ever before to balance the death of sugar.

The club is managed by the School of Horticulture at Ambler, and Miss Wright, who is in charge of the apiary at Ambler and who is an experienced beekeeper, will give her whole time to the work. Efforts are being made to get the Bee Club started at once so that none of the honey season, the months of June, July and August, may be wasted.

PENNELL COMPLAINS HE IS SLIGHTED HERE

Temperamental Criticism by Artist-Lithographer Causes Comment at Exhibition

In what otherwise was a most innocent and amiable private exhibition of eighty-six original drawings and lithographs of his war work in America, attended by persons prominent in the local art world and a group of Mr. Pennell's friends, in addition to Admiral Bowles at Rosenbach's gallery yesterday afternoon, Joseph Pennell added a touch of sharp rejoinder in the way of criticism on his native city for its assumed neglect of him, that amounted a great deal of comment of one kind and another.

The indictment of Philadelphia came in the shape of the very first conclusion to his introduction to the second part of the catalogue of his works in this, after pointing out that the President had indorsed his drawings by saying that "they are remarkably interesting and remarkably fine," and that Secretary Baker and Admiral Bowles had highly approved of them, he then went on to speak "in meeting" as follows:

"Mr. Jussendant, the French ambassador, gave the French minister of education, who has not only been good enough to commend the lithographs, but honor me by announcing that they will be shown in the Luxembourg Museum in Paris, and they will also, I am informed by the committee, be put on exhibition in Japan, and during the last six months they have been shown in fifty-one exhibitions here, and this gives me the chance to again thank the Philadelphia workman, George Cuel, therefore the easy mark of every cheap newspaperman in the land—and the able assistant secretary of the directors of the Philadelphia Public Library, H. C. Welch, for their endless help in this, and my greatest indebtedness is due to Miss L. Meelin, secretary of the American Federation of Art, who arranged for the exhibition. This is the only sort of work I can do for my native land. I am perfectly aware that it is of small importance—especially in my eyes. But I know it is of public interest to the eyes of Philadelphians. It was not made in Struce Street. JOSEPH PENNELL.

Admiral Bowles, after being introduced by J. E. D. Trask, in a few words expressed himself as delighted with the cooperation of the artists of the country. He said that in talking to the directors of the Philadelphia Public Library, San Antonio, Tex., having called last October. He got a furlough to return home to marry prior to sailing for France. He will return to Philadelphia Thursday, while his bride will remain at the home of her parents until after the war.

Student Letter Says Time Has Come for University to Abolish It

A discussion of the teaching of German at Penn has been opened by a student letter published in the University daily, the Pennsylvania. It charges the University with being unpatriotic by teaching German. It says, in part:

"In view of the fact that a widespread movement to abolish the German language from our American schools, colleges and universities is well under way, it is thus that we, as representatives of one of the greatest universities of America, join this 'Americanization' move."

"Some may say that this action is narrow-minded. Their loyalty will bear close scrutiny. Our Government has proved beyond all controversy to the contrary that the German language in our schools and colleges is an insidious means of spreading enemy propaganda; deliberately placed through the workings of the Fraternity movement in your country, America, asks you to stamp out the German liar and propagandist work in the vitals of America."
