"But here, what are those fellows doing?" and Jerry pointed to a knot of men on the sidewalk apparently conducting some kind of a game of Simon Says.

"That's the Deutch men, holding a carter election to name officers of the city. They are holding a carter election to name officers of the city. They are holding a carter election to name officers of the city."

"Well, it's no more than a feud between two mobs," he decided, and just as he was about to turn away, he saw a group of four young men...

"MOTHER!" "Yes, Laura?" "Well, you know, mother, Roy Benton is coming home for a few days before going over there."

"Is he? That is very nice, indeed," said Mrs. Nelson. "Yes, it is. There is going to be a dance given in his honor. Do you suppose I could have a new dance suit to wear to it, just to see what the crowd would say?"

"At the Dance" Laura went to the dance hall alone, and a little later than the other girls, for she wanted to see what the general impression of her old-fashioned dress...

"Oh, that trunk!" snapped Laura angrily. "I wish Aunt Bess had never sold it to me. Then she left her mother and went to her room."

CHAPTER IV

Blue Jay Proves a Rasal

(Peggy goes to Mr. Dalton's farm to find out the way crops of the giant of the Woods are coming along. She finds them in danger of being ruined by insect pests. She discovers that Mr. Dalton has driven away the Birds, the natural enemies of these pests.)

The Birds were gathered in the council hall which Peggy first visited on the day she was crowned Princess of Birdland. There Peggy guided Mr. Dalton, the Giant of the Woods, and Billy Belgium.

Mr. Dalton was puzzled and uneasy as he looked over the great crowd of Birds assembled there—some sitting on the sloping grassy floor, some perched on the surrounding bushes, some high above in the trees.

Peggy's throne was waiting for her—a much larger throne than she had occupied upon former visits when she had been reduced to the size of an elf.

"Excuse me for asking, Laurie," said Roy, using the old name he had called her in days gone by, "but where did you get that dress?"

"You look so different from the rest of the girls, Sweetie, somehow. Oh, I'm sorry for that. I don't know. You couldn't do it? Oh, hang it all, I love you. Will you marry me before I go away?"

"You look so different from the rest of the girls, Sweetie, somehow. Oh, I'm sorry for that. I don't know. You couldn't do it? Oh, hang it all, I love you. Will you marry me before I go away?"

"Night birds work at night," hooted Judge Owl

Will you tell the Birds why you haven't made them welcome to your farm? "This seems foolishness," declared the farmer, "they can't understand me any more than I can understand them."

"Why don't you know what they are saying?" asked Peggy in surprise. "Well, I don't know. They don't seem to be saying anything. That will let our talk in." This was the advice of Mr. Swallow. It seemed silly, but Peggy did as he said and blew vigorously. Mr. Dalton jerked his head away and shook it angrily. Then a look of astonishment came over his face.

"Why, I can understand what they say," he exclaimed. "Now will you present your case? And smile, please," Jerry urged. Mr. Dalton nodded, then he did smile, and it made a wonderful difference.

"You bet I am," shrilled Mr. Swallow pugnaciously. "I used to live in Mr. Dalton's barn and I paid my rent many times over by catching thousands and thousands of beetles that were eating up his garden. Now that he has bounced the Birds out, the Beetles are growing fat and Mr. Dalton is growing poor. So am I."

"I had a home in the garden, too, sweetly," and I paid for it by ridding the fields of myriads of insects and beetles that I carried away. The Beetles, huddles and other vermin, and I kept the ants from spreading everywhere," said Mr. Thrush.

"I've eaten spiders, worms and insects," declared Blue Bird. "I've eaten up hundreds of beetles. I've eaten a hundred times over by digging up cutworms," boasted Robin Redbreast.

"I'm Bob White, Bob White!" whistled Judge Owl. "I've eaten grasshoppers and other destroyers as among our prey."

"I've eaten grasshoppers and other destroyers as among our prey." "The Night Birds work at night," clattered Judge Owl. "I've eaten grasshoppers and other destroyers as among our prey."
