"They were packed off amid boxes and bundles filled with flannel, and the week of her visit she was gayer than ever, getting her friend safely married off."

"But to go home was of course out of the question for Nancy. John Orth met her that evening and told her so at the same time handing her no less than a dozen invitations from her various friends to come and stay with them during her father's illness."

"That's right," said John Orth, heartily, "and I'm going home with you."

CHAPTER VI The Rout of the Pests

"Peggy, finding that Farmer Dalton's corn crops are being decimated by worms and insect pests, seeks to find the aid of the Birds, only to find that they are at odds with her..."

ALL through Mr. Dalton's farm the food-destroying hordes were in high glee. In the potato patch the Colorado Beetles—as the potato bugs called themselves—held full sway.

"When we've got through," they hummed to each other, "there'll not be a vine left and without vines how can potatoes grow?"

In the wheat fields and meadows the grasshoppers and field mice played and feasted. In the bean fields caterpillars and worms were busy. In the truck garden tomato worms, cutworms, cabbage worms, and a whole host of grubs and bugs ate and ate, while they planned bigger feasts to come.

"This is a fine farm," buzzed the tiny pests. "This is a splendid farm," chirped the larger insects. And the worms and grubs never said a thing, but ate and ate.

Suddenly the sky grew dark. The bugs and beetles began to seek shelter under leaves. Night crawling worms came from their holes. A great shadow swept down upon the earth, swinging lower and lower. "It's going to be an awful storm," thought the pests.

Farmer Dalton's house stood on a hill in mid-air. Judge Owl led his battalion of night birds against the field mice and beetles. In the fields, the meadows, the potato patch, the garden and the orchard, the birds pecked and ate and hunted. The destruction of useful food stoned the instant they swept down from the sky, for the pests were so busy trying to hide themselves they did not dare eat.

"I'm against you, too, Mr. Archer," said the younger and more intelligent appearing man, pushing up...
