

Evening Public Ledger

Philadelphia, Wednesday, June 5, 1918

PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE SUNKEN TANKER PRATT—CAROLINA SURVIVORS FIND HAVEN AT THE SHORE

FIRST PHOTOGRAPH taken of the oil tanker Herbert L. Pratt as she appeared off the Delaware Breakwater after the attack by a German submarine which sent her nose temporarily under the waves.

PHILADELPHIANS AMONG the survivors from the S. S. Carolina, landed at Lewes, Delaware. Left to right, T. Yleaves and Emmanuel Gavino, members of the crew, and Juan Jose Emanuelli, a passenger.

SHRINERS FROM LU LU TEMPLE, Philadelphia, did their bit in making the survivors from the S. S. Carolina as comfortable as possible at the shore. In the photograph above one of the Shriners is shown shaking hands with some of the survivors.

NO SOONER WAS THE NEWS that the tanker Pratt had been sunk in the shallow water off Lewes than plans were laid to raise her. The photograph above shows a wrecking tug at work on the tanker.

ONCE ON TERRA FIRMA again and properly fed and clothed, these members of the crew of the S. S. Carolina, landed at Atlantic City, called for the newspapers, with which they are plentifully supplied in the above photograph.

SAFE AND SOUND at Atlantic City, the women survivors of the steamship Carolina were minded to regard their terrible experience much in the light of a lark.