England's War Recipes

MANY RICH GERMAN

In a communication addressed "To the Women of the Upper Classes" in the Kolnische Zeitung, the writer brings out the importance of "complete mobilization of the energies of all women" during war. "Let no one interpose the objection that a hereon who in this the careful

ELSING

One of the circulars sent out by the British Ministry of Food says: "The food question has now become so urgent that, as a pation, we must con- Journalist Scores Them for sider the best ways of obtaining all available nourishment from foods, and we must prepare every dish with that in view." Between the lines of those simple words we may read how close to bedrock England has come in this war. Here are some of the recipes which her people are using : Baked Butter Beans and Tomatoes

This recipe is given as one which will take-the place of meat. "These recipes are a little more trouble to cook than meat, but they cost less," states the circular.

One pint butter beans, ? tablespoonfuls fat. 2 tomatoes, 1 large potato, 1 onion, very small.

which our people are laboring, who still places personal well-being above concern for the common good, is irre-trievably lost for a great object." says the writer. "Certainly, every German woman, the wealthy woman most of all, ought at the start to have compre-hended her duty toward her country in this fearful war of starvation, as well-as the diverse survey of the start to the start to the start to have compre-hended her duty toward her country in Wash and soak the beans for twenty-Wash and soak the beans for twenty-four hours in soft water. Simmer for about two hours with a large meat bone if you have one. Peel and finely chop the onion, slice the tomatoes, scrub and grate the potators. Met the fat in a small saucepan or casserole, fry the onion in this until nicely browned, then add the sliced tomatoes, fry for a few minutes, add the potato and one cup of the stock from beans: let sumer for ture and inherited wealth have rendered luxurious that force of habit plays so important a role, and herein may well lie an explanation for the disastrous retention of her comforts by the woman of this type. With this attitude there must be mercliess interference. "Because the educated middle class is scarcely able longer to furnish the necessary reserve contingent, we must the stock from beans; let simmer for about twenty minutes, then strain the Drain the beans well (saving the liquid for soup), mix them with the sauce and put into a fireproof dish and bake fifteen or twenty minutes. A little grated cheese sprinkled over the top is a great improvement.

the same reason they are in a position to restore their strength by travel, and because of their larger wardrobes to risk, rather than the women of the lower classes, using up their clothes in war work.

"Thus all considerations favor the enlistment of the service of those women who have hitherto lived at their ease (with the exception, of course, of those who are bound by the duties of motherhood)
