At Winnipeg I was not getting my clubhead through on the last day, and the result was frequently disastrous; yet will for otherwise I was swinging well for otherwise I was swinging well. What I worked out in my half-hour at Chicago goif was but an expansion of an little incident at Duluth. On one of the closing holes I had put my blade too near the ball before pressing forward and it slipped down the uneven ground and just turned the ball over a little into a very bad lie. I stopped my stroke and played carefully a beautiful shot to within three feet of the hole.

Sargent, who was standing near me, said that he thought the ball moved. I agreed with the view of course, although in our games we are unaccustanted to take notice of it, when it is clearly an accident; but I care nothing for whining except by actual strokes, and so when it came my time to putt I purposely missed the half. But were is the time to be careful about such a thing happening

SCOTT PERRY AWARDED TO BOSTON BY THE NATIONAL COMMISSION

Cincinnati, O., June 13.

In a majority finding the National Baseball Commission yesterday de clared the transfer of Player Scott Perry from the Atlanta club to the Philadelphia American League club null and void, and upheld the claim of the Boston National League club to the player's services upon the payment of $2000 to the Atlanta club. The Boston club was also permitted to return the player to Atlanta if, after thirteen days' trial, it desires to President Johnson, of the American League, did not concur in the finding, which was signed by Chairman August Herrmann, of the National Commission; President Tener, of the National League, and Secretary J. H. Farrell, of the National Association. President R. H. Bough, of the South rn Association, filed a minority finding, in which he stated he believed the Atlanta club was within its rights in disposing of Perry to the Philadelphia club

Perry was sold by Atlanta to the Boston Nationals for $2000, optional agreement, but deserted the team on June 17, 1917. The Boston club was assured at the time that if the player ever returned to organized baseball terights would be protected, although the National League notified Boston that it could not carry the player on its inclinable list. As he was being carried on Atlanta's ineligible list. Boston at that time had paid a $500 installment of the $2000 agreed for the player,

Boston complained and laid claim to the player, providing it fulfilled the original agreement made to Atlanta. The majority of the commission
