Hunting a Husband

By MARY DOUGLAS (Copyright)

CHAPTER XXVII The Decision COUBIN SAM acts just the same as usual. He has returned to his more boyish manner. He even asked me today to go to the library with him. But it is Aunt Emily that makes me constantly uncomfortable. I feel sure that it was she that made him propose to me. And now that I have refused him, she takes it as a direct insult to herself.

"Do you know," Aunt Emily went on, "quite as if she had not heard my last remark, 'I had been married seven years when we were together.' 'But girls married so much earlier than I did,' I could not refrain from saying.
