PLAIN TALK FOR GIRLS WHO WANT TO BE WRITERS

A Great Many of Them Begin at the Wrong End and Rush in Where Experienced Journalists Fear to Tread—An Answer to a Veritable "Postage Stamp"

SOMEHOW my heart always gives a little extra leap when the letter which falls out of the envelope asks "how to be a writer."

Mary's Pity

In an old country, Far and far away, A woman went a-weeping, On a fresh spring day.

I would like to be your fairy godmother, Ambitious, because I would have such good material to work with.

I CAN tell best how to begin, little Postage Stamp, by relating to you the experiences of a girl who was probably the same age you are now.

WHAT the young woman writes says is quite true. Those who are bound to become successful writers must begin at the very beginning.

Adventures With a Purse

FOUND TODAY 1. A Japanese tea set. 2. A lovely Red Cross dolly. 3. Some trinket ornaments. 4. Dainty collar and cuff pins.

THE slender purse may have an eye for beauty, and sometimes, gazing wistfully at a picture, a colorful vase there, the owner may be overpowered with such a wave of extravagance.

Do you remember when we had our big Red Cross drive last summer? The children dressed as nurses and collected contributions? Our small folks are stanch little patriots.

For the names of shops where articles mentioned in "Adventures With a Purse" can be purchased, address Editor of Woman's Page.

Hunting a Husband

By MARY DOUGLAS (Copyright)

Questioning the Past, HOME again. I hated to leave Aunt Emily's. And that sleepy old air of South Minister, an atmosphere that seemed to say, "Nothing has happened and nothing will ever happen."

Why have I failed? Am I not as attractive as the other girls? I thought again of Jeanne and Dorothy. Yes, I can amply make up for my lack of youth.
