Men thus drawn go to the foot of Class 1 and will be drawn before the close of the year, according to present plans. The drawing today, though it is being watched for eagerly, is not of such supreme importance to the new registrants as last year's drawing was to the men then registered. Millions were registered before the first drawing, which determined to a large extent the order of liability to service.

Since there are less than a million new registrants and since most of these are not married the bulk of them will be placed at the bottom of the lists of be placed at the bottom of the lists of Class 1 in their respective local draft districts. All able-bodied men without dependents and not engaged in essential industries will go into this class. And since almost all the old registrants of this class have been called to service all the new men in it are virtually certain to be called before the year is over and go to camp unless disqualified or disabled.

By CLINTON W. GILBERT Staff Correspondent Evening Public Ledge Washington, June 27.

Two steps with regard to Russia are likely to be taken by this country or by some of the Allies in the near future. One is a strengthening of the Allied force at Murmansk. At that point a small landing of Allied marines was made some time ago. And news comes from Russia that German and Finnish armies are slowly advancing toward the Murmansk railroad, evidently with the intention of driving the Allies out of Murmansk and tak-

the Allies out of Murmansk and taking possession of this one ice-free Arctic port of Russia.

Possession of Murmansk is of importance to both the Central Powers and to the Allies. It also is important to Russia, since, as Germany has partitioned the former empire of the Czar, it is the only western port left to the t is the only western port left to the Russians.

To the Allies it is important to hold the port because if the eastern front is ever reconstituted, whether by Russia herself or by a combination of the Allies, it is important to have railroad communication with this front by the way of European water. An eastern front will have two railway lines with itee-free waters behind it if Murmansk is held, a line from the Arctic and the Transsiberian Railway from Vladivostok. Without Murmansk only the long communication across Siberia will be available.
