Nancy Wynne Attends Opera-She Also Goes to a Pretty Wedding—She Has a Lot to Say About a Great Many Other Things, Too

ONE felt quite as if one were at the Mrs. Rivinus was Miss Marion Martin, elder daughter of Judge and Mrs. J. Willis Martin, of this city. opera festival. There were the Ned Brownings entertaining in one box and the Richard Gilpin Woods and the Lawrence Beggs in another. Mrs. Stotesbury, look-ing very handsome in a Nile green gown, was in a box and entertained Lady Lister-Kaye. Mrs. Alexander Williams Biddle, John Bell and Willing Hare. The John Scotts were in the stockholders' seats and all through the audience were familiar faces of opera-goers during the big season

It only goes to prove that the usual opera-goer does appreciate good music and s willing to go to popular-priced operas, even if the scenic effects are not those of the Metropolitan; at least the voices are on a par with the finest, many of them being Metropolitan stars and the others Chicago Opera Company stars.

Yesterday afternoon was another sample of society in attendance. I only wish they had planned a three of four weeks' stay rather than two only. Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Barney and their daughter, Baroness von Hiller, were there, and Mrs. Ashton Little and Mary, Mrs. George Horace Lorimer and several others.

DID you go to the Zeckwer-McDonogh wedding yesterday? It was awfully pretty. In St. Patrick's Church, you know. and there never was a more wonderful background for a wedding than that gorgeous church, with its wide sanctuary and beautiful marble altars. The bridesmaids and ushers were arranged in two rows on prie dieus and knelt there during the ceremony and the nuptial mass, which was said by Monsignor Kieren, who is rector of that church, and who will, incidentally, celebrate this year his fiftieth anniversary in the priesthood.

The sanctuary was simply banked on either side with huge palms and pink climbing roses and azaleas, and the altar was decorated with pink cluster roses. Jamard's white uniform and those of four of his ushers added greatly to the picturesqueness of the scene, and Agnes certainly did look lovely. Her dress was sweet, all tulle and cloth of silver, and she wore a low coronet of orange blossoms, which was so much more becoming than the stiff coronet effects so many brides are wearing this year. Jamard is an ensign of the pavy, you know, and is stationed at Lewes, Del., at present, so after a short wedding trip he and his bride will live

THEY really had a delightful time, the girl who was helping to entertain the sailors and marines and the big handsome marine who played "Three Deep" with

Don't be worried, gentle reader; "Three Deep" is simply another word for French tag. I believe, in the language of the children, and, as Ethel says: "It's more darn One is 'it' and you stand in a circle, and the one that's 'it'-no I think there are two 'it'-but anyhow, you stand in two circles, one outside of the other. and you have partners and hold hand? and the one that's 'it' stands in front of one couple in the inside of the circle, and then the one opposite the one that's 'it' makes it three deep, and that one has to run. It's more darn fun; we used to do it at school." Well, it certainly sounds funny to me. I can't quite yet get where the one runs to nor how long he or she runs or keeps on running and how you get to be "it" next time; but they tell me no one else does, so what's the difference However, it's "more darn fun."

And then, anyway, this story is not about "Three Deep"; it's about the girl and the marine. Well, after he and she had played she danced with a sailor boy and then another marine sauntered up and they talked and talked, and in between times the first marine would come up and talk and talk, too. Well, he was almost making an impression when the second marine remarked sweetly: "He's nice-looking, isn't he? And looks so young, too. You'd never dream he was married and had a little daughter four years old, would you?"

Nice fellows, these men, aren't they? But you can't blame them if they see a perfectly nice girl about to fall for a gay deceiver, now can you? Anyway, she had fun and so had the two marines, I'll warrant. And no one was hurt.

THERE was much excitement yesterday Afternoon at the Broad Street Theatre when Mrs. Woodrow Wilson arrived and gave the Girl Scouts Troop No. 57 a flag for the splendid work done in the last Liberty Loan drive. The lower part of the house was a wonderful sight. The Scouts were all in uniform and looked great, and the new ones who had not yet received their uniforms wore white middles and sat in the balcony. Ellen Mary Cassatt, the real leader of the Girl Scout movement in this city, met Mrs. Wilson at the station and took her to the theatre, where the girls received her with great enthusisum. It was altogether a dandy affair. NANCY WYNNE.

It is feared by the Philadelphia committee for the relief of the fatherless children of France that communication between French rphans and those who have adopted them will be inconveniently delayed owing to the re-cent German advance. Mrs. John Markoe is the local chairman and has had communications recently suggesting that such delays may be expected since a number of transfers of children to positions of greater safety water found necessary.

Miss Suzanne Silvercruys, the talented and eloquent young Belgian girl who has stirred many audiences here has been asked to re-turn to Camp Meade and talk to the boys. What Women Are Doing in Washington

WOMEN are taking their places in army hospitals in a new role. Not content with with nursing sick soldiers, they are ministering to their needs as camp hospital librarians under the direction of the war service of the American Library Association.

In the left wing or the great library of Congress at Washington in the headquarters of the association's war service more than sixty men and women are giving their time to providing books for soldiers, both over here to providing books for soldiers, both over here and over there. They are detailed from libraries and library schools all over the country to serve for three months or longer in Washington, while their salaries are paid by their home associations.

In this way they carry on the cierical and administrative machinery for dispatching 100,000 books a month to France and of supporting 500 camps, stations and vessels with a million and a half volumes. In addition, they have sent 120 librarians after these books to care for them in the camps, and are now supplying military hospitals with women to act as librarians.

SICK soldiers create special demands which must be met in extraordinary ways. These ump hospital librarians are an example; out the hosts of applicants for the position only fifteen women have as yet been selected. There is not the slightest difficulty in securing all the women needed, but first the Library Association must be sure of the right type of woman and second a place for her to live must be found.

Undoubtedly the army looks with favor on the "lady librarian" in camp hospitals, since t has officially requested that she adopt a This means that she has been as an institution, a part of the great war machine.

Her pungee shirtwaist suit white collar and dark-brown the is an ideal costume for hot summer days, a brown brassard on the left arm, lettered "A. L. A." and panama hat and Library Association pin complete the attractive picture. Some wonder that candidates must be chosen with special attention to their dignity and experience.

BOOKS for sick men and those slowly pull-ing back to health are selected rigor-Love stories, of course, lead all ously. Love stories, of course lead all the rest. "Give me a real love story," cagerly demanded one fellow in a convalencent ward. "All the men laughed" said the librarian. "but as I went from bed to bed one after another would say. I want one like that other fellow asked for."

Scrapbooks made of cheery clippings, illustrations and short stories are favorites, for they are light to hold and their neces.

for they are light to hold and their pages easy to turn. Book wagens go from ward to ward beinging a small assortment of special books to tease the patients' interest.

In the psychiatric wards the librarian must fren turn story-teller and take the books to the men in a spoken form. Anyone who has cultivated the gift of vivid, sustained story telling such as used in the children's hour in many city libraries, should offer their services now at all army hospitals for DETROIT'S public library system is doing its bit in the war emergency by loaning Miss Marian Humble to the library war serv ice in Washington for the next few months. She has been director of publicity for Detroit's libraries and comes to the capital to work along the same lines for the national issociation.

If the American public can be made to understand that more and better books are wanted by the men who are fighting their battles they will strip the shelves of every crivate collection in the country to provide

It has been hoped that this ruting of the Postmaster General would result in a steady stream of our best periodicals into the camp libraries. On the contrary, the dear public seems to have developed a curious tendency to dump the accumulation of years on to the Postoffice Department. Back numbers for hree and four years, sometimes for ten, have been sent, evidently in the attempt to clear out the attic shelves.

director of the chorus.

It tells the story of the uprising of the nations of the world against tyranny and carries the message of the victory of right-cousness.

The patience, despair and finally, the wrath of the world, kindled by prolonged indignities are depicted in the melody, which many believe will prove to be one of Mr. Herbert's best creations. May Ebrey Hots and Horace R. Hood will be the solution.

The ode will be part of a program made up entirely of Victor Harbert's compositions. Although the new composition will have sung until the Suni, opposition will be sung until the Suni, oppositions.
