RECENTLY RETIRED CHIEF OF THE UNITED STATES SECRET SERVICE

BETWEEN Fort Colborne on Lake Erie and Dalhousie, less than seven miles distant, on the shore of Lake Huron, in a straight, narrow stretch of water which occupies a place in the winning of the world war second only to that of the English Channel. This waterway is the greatest part of the explanation of Canada's ability to keep the stream and volume of troops and supplies pouring steadily across the ocean to England and France. By means of it the troops of the provinces bordering on the Great Lakes, as well as the supplies of those of the United States which are accessible to the inland waterways, have been carried rapidly and cheaply to the great port of Montreal. This waterway, carrying capacity of the railroads of the Dominion. It is the only canal constructed and maintained by Canada to overcome the obstructions to navigation between the rapids and the famous falls of Niagara River.

From the early days of the war, from the time when its importance to the mobilization of Canada's resources became apparent, the Welland Canal was constantly in the minds of the arm of spies and planters maintained in America by the Imperial German Government. Its locks, constructed to raise the largest of lake vessels to the 242-foot level in the levels of the two lakes, offered a tempting mark for a charge of dynamite. The destruction of one of the locks would cripple the canal and render it useless for months, thus impeding greatly the extension of the war.

It was giving Great Britain the placing of a charge of explosive in one of the gates would be a matter of but little time, as it could be easily done from the American side, where the Canadian guards, respected as they were, could not interrupt the conspirators.

There were serious objections to carrying out a plot to destroy the canal which occurred to Johann von Lertz, a German agent in the United States. message had not been understood and no watch had been placed on the alley. But no. A figure suddenly launched himself from the kitchen landing platform on to the running board of the car. A second appeared from the garbage cans and the glint of a revolver could be seen in his hand as he vaulted to the vacant seat by the driver. The car came to a sudden halt and a terrible struggle occurred in the tonneau. The struggle was short-lived, however. A revolver shot, the flash of which showed to the air, and Jacobson was a prisoner.

"Look, look! Isn't that Harrison Grant?" gasped Von Lertz, clutching Dixie's arm as another figure appeared in the alley running toward the car. "Any one hurt here?" asked the driver. "No, no, no," replied the man who had been recognized by Von Lertz. "The man who had been recognized by Von Lertz was Harrison Grant. He was a man of high intelligence and a man of high courage. He was a man of high intelligence and a man of high courage. He was a man of high intelligence and a man of high courage. He was a man of high intelligence and a man of high courage.

It was a call from the running figure, which made his identification as the president of the Criminology Club a certainty. Von Lertz, who had been cursing furiously as he gazed into the alleyway, suddenly, affrightedly became aware of his own precarious position. "Quick, we must get out of here," he uttered hoarsely and led the way through the door to the corridor. "There was no one but a helboy to be seen, bearing a tray with a pitcher of water. They must remain here, for their work may begin any time," returned the spy and then escorted Dixie to a little room where he had procured a chair. "There was but little conversation on the drive out. At the canal Von Lertz looked at you and saw that you had fully surveyed the surrounding land. Dixie's visit progressed his spirit rose rapidly. The Letter Berlin Wanted

Through the half-opened door of an Italian hotel she saw the man she had watched for weeks place the document in his bag. Berlin wanted that letter. Operations along the Piave would be helpless without it. As the officer turned away for a moment . . .
