ANNIOUS. My dear, you and your own feelings about this man can judge far better what would be bear in this case than j could. If you really love him so much that you feel life would be hard without him, do not hesitate; marry him. But if you-doubt your feelings or the adviss-bility of marrying you had better wait until after the war. You are both very young, and the test of separation is a good one. Why not consult your sunts about it? They know the young mas and they know you and your character and temperament.

Because, perhaps, they have not mar-ried, do not think they cannot judge. Sometimes the unmarried woman who is broad and far-sighted is the best kind of an adviser.

WHICH shall it be when it comes to the more or less formal and evening occasions-the cape or the cloak?

There is much to be said on both sides.

I shall, however, let the cape present its arguments another time. Today the cloak is here and shall speak for itself. Just because it has sleeves the cloak claims that it is more generally comfortable and practical, and I think we will admit the justice of this claim. It is said by many that the cape is quite all right for the limousine, but that comparatively few are proprietors. Regardless of this, the cape has been remarkably popular this last season, but it remains to be seen if it will hold its posiing of the cloaks, which are in most cases a combination of the good points of the cape and the cloak. It will not be difficult for you to get my meaning when

Be that as it may, the cape without doubt has greatly influenced the design-tion this coming fall.
