...ith the Americans on the Marne, July 14 (night).

It was the First Division that captured Cantigny, and it was the Second Division that stopped the Germans on the Marne, it is now permissible to state.

The marines then captured Bouresches and Belleau wood, now officially designated on French War Office maps as "Bois de la Brigade Marine." The Ninth and Twenty-third Infantries, with the marines, captured Vaux, while portions of other infantry regiments held the right of the Second Division's line and did excellent work. Artillery, machine-gunners and all units of the Second Division share in the glory of the historic marine fighting.

The First Division is a unit which came over directly from the Mexican border and was the first to land in France, first to enter the trenches for training and first to enter a permanent American line.

They were rushed from the Toul front to Picardy late in March, and entered the line west of Montdidier on April 24. There they withstood heavy enemy bombardments and consolidated their line. Their artillery did effective work, and the infantry and other units gained ascendancy over the boches. The climax of their work was the capture of Cantigny, which they are holding, despite repeated severe counter-attacks.

The First Division, according to announcement by General March, Saturday, is composed of regulars under Major General Rullard, who commanded the Brownsville, Texas, district for several years. The Second Division is composed of regulars, including marines, under Major General Bundy.
