

Evening Public Ledger

and THE EVENING TELEGRAPH

Philadelphia, Wednesday, July 24, 1918

DISCOMFORTED PHILADELPHIA SEEKS SHELTER FROM OLD KING SOL'S WITHERING HEAT BARRAGE

FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS one of the great summer charities has been the children's sanitarium at Red Bank, N. J. When the mercury teeters around the ninety mark, relief always awaits at this health center on the banks of the Delaware. The boat ride is free, so that the advantages of Red Bank are being generously availed of, as the above photograph gives proof.

A CLOSE RIVAL of Red Bank, when it comes to making the kiddies comfortable, is the city playground with its wading pool.

IF IT WERE NOT for the S. P. C. A. and a kind-hearted master, Dobbin's lot would be a hard one with the city streets refracting the sun's scorching rays.

THE CITY FREQUENTLY FACES a water famine in summer, but younger Philadelphians of the male sex are entirely unappreciative.

THE VERY YOUNG children, because of their inability to move about, suffer extremely from the heat, their mothers' efforts notwithstanding.

BORN IN GERMANY, but an American heart and soul is Mrs. H. Gressman, 5555 Baltimore avenue, who has knit fifty-two pairs of woolen socks for soldiers since early in March.

FUNDS ARE NEEDED AGAIN for comfort kits, so the service star committee of the Emergency Aid is conducting a rummage sale at 1332 Walnut street. In the photograph, Mrs. Louis R. Page, chairman, is displaying some of the offerings.

A NOBLE SERVICE NOBLY DONE is that rendered by the Philadelphia Canteen Service of the Red Cross, which cheers so many soldiers passing through this city on their way "over there." Each day a motortruck with fruit and cigarettes makes its way to the stations.