

WOMAN'S WORLD MOTHER, ESPECIALLY A SOLDIER'S MOTHER ADVENTURES WITH A PURSE

WHEN A SOLDIER BOY SLEPT ON HIS MOTHER'S SHOULDER

As On a Train and He Was a Little Ashamed When He Woke Up but There Was Never a Queen With Her Crown Prouder Than the Woman Who Guarded Him

AT EACH station the passengers already in the train looked up at the faces of those who were getting in to watch them and see what every one in the car was taking a choky part of pride in. A soldier asleep on his mother's shoulder.

Women have had proud moments, I know; there have been queens, for instance, with new jewels added to a tiara. There have been others who have stood behind the footlights drinking in the mad plaudits of the crowd, but who were in the car moving in a leisurely local way from one little white fence to the next know that we saw pride that outshone that of other kinds as does the sun the moon when the soldier boy slept on his mother's shoulder.

CHAPTER LXIX MY DIFFICULTIES in Hillston had to do with matters of instruction rather than of discipline; to be sure there were among my pupils half a dozen boys, all older than myself, who were said to have made trouble for schoolma'ams heretofore. Tom Loren was the ringleader among them and it was fortunate that he was so good to gain his good will at the start. Fred Yates had talked about him for my benefit the Sunday before last, and from the tone he used in warning me of the young whipper-snapper who prides himself on earning the money of his father, I inferred there was no love lost between the two young men, and surmised as well that Tom's opinion of Fred (about which I had never heard a word from the subject) would probably be even more unfavorable than was Fred's opinion of Tom; if such was the case then since the deacon's son figured in my reckoning as the most obnoxious youth alive, it seemed likely that Tom and I already had one strong bond of sympathy, although it was of such a nature that even for the sake of steeling my mind to his good graces on the strength of it I could not mention it. However, it turned out that Tom Loren and myself had no real quarrel, and I was content the understanding which flashed between us the first time he spoke to me.

Please Tell Me What to Do

By CYNTHIA

Cynthia is a real woman who knows and understands girls. In this department she stands ready to help them with the intricate problems somehow easier to read in letters than in any other way. If you are worried or perplexed, write to "Cynthia," in care of the woman's page, Evening Public Ledger.

Letter to Son's fiancée Dear Cynthia—I have a friend, a mother, who has been writing to you with her telling her that he is engaged to a girl who is in an American army. He can't give her name, but he wishes his name to be written in the paper. I am enclosing them in my letter to him, and you kindly write to him for a letter to this young girl in France. I suppose the boy forgot all about the fact that his fiancée had a name, and it really is too bad he isn't? You are more at home to be able to call a person something. Under the circumstances the mother might write a note something on "Charlie" in the letter. My Dear:— You see I cannot call you by name, for Charlie was so much in love with you he forgot to tell me your name when he wrote of his happiness. Am anxious to meet you for I naturally want to see the girl my boy loves. It is a common thing to know that you are on the same side of the water with him and if he should be hurt could go to him, which his poor old mother could not do. You will be a welcome addition to the family, dear, and I hope it will not have to be long before we are writing you home with Charlie. Write to me. CHARLIE'S MOTHER.

Has Never Been to Parties Dear Cynthia—How much you have heard so many other young girls with their mothers have at last understood enough to go together to bring home to you, a young lady twenty-four years of age, who has been to parties for the last five years been on the list of those who have been to parties. I don't want to tell you my tale of woe, but you really believe me if I were to tell you that I have never been to a dance with any boys, in fact do not know how to go. The reason for this is that when I was younger my parents objected to my going to parties, and I grew up never knowing any, and consequently, never any. You may wonder why I haven't met any boys, and I have been married. The few boys who have been to parties have been so tied down that they have not had time to entertain. I don't know if there are clubs here in town where you can go to parties. I don't know if there are clubs here in town where you can go to parties. I don't know if there are clubs here in town where you can go to parties.

Probably Will Be Called

To the Editor of Woman's Page: Dear Madam—You have helped me in many things and I hope you will help me in this one, too. I am twenty-three years of age and have been rejected from military service, but have been put in Class 1A for special and limited military service. Could you kindly tell me if I will be called any more? I was examined in April, but I have not heard from the army since then. I can find out about it and where must I go to find out. Foulard Is Ever Popular

A Daily Fashion Talk by Florence Rose

FOR the moment foulard is having everything its own way. There are a few of us who do not cherish, way down in our memory, the recollection of springs that wouldn't have seemed quite right without a foulard gown, and the very first opportunity to bring back this foulard frock we have grasped with eager hands. At least one foulard gown is in the wardrobe—or will be—of nine out of ten women this summer. And there is much to make the welcome to foulard so enthusiastic. It is exceedingly good to look upon, wears well—at least it did at its earlier incarnation—and comes in a large assortment of designs and colorings.

CHINESE NURSES WITH RED CROSS

DOROTHY AND MAUDE FRANCIS Trained in American schools, these Chinese nurses would enroll with the Red Cross to nurse Americans in France

CHINESE GIRLS TO NURSE U. S. SOLDIERS IN FRANCE

The Misses Francis, of Trinidad, Trained in Bellevue Hospital, New York, Will Help Allied Cause

DOROTHY and Maude Francis, young Chinese women of means who came all the way from Trinidad to study nursing in an American training school, have offered their services to the American Red Cross to nurse Americans in France. Anxious to do their best for the Allied cause, these young women overcame the traditional Chinese opposition to women leaving home and came to America to become trained nurses. "Every one, the British as well as the American doctors and merchants and business men of all countries," said Dorothy Francis, "told me that the American trained nurse was the most efficient of her profession; that the hospitals, the training schools, the opportunities for experience for trained nurses, as found in America, were equaled in no other country."

What Would You Do? If somebody handed you a hundred thousand dollars, how would you spend it? Eleanor H. Porter tells what happened in three different cases, and does it as delightfully as she did when she introduced "Pollyanna" to the world. Her new story, "Oh, Money, Money!" begins Monday, July 29, in Evening Public Ledger

Adventures With a Purse

FOUND TODAY

- 1. Cluny pattern lace for centerpieces, 2. Pappy doreastop for little girl's room, 3. Ties of unusual value for tailored blouse.

HOW many of us have had the experience of carefully embroidering a centerpiece or dolly, very enthusiastically about it, until the end, when we were so glad it was actually finished at last, we put it aside in sewing bag or basket, and forgot about it? If you have a centerpiece now that is completely finished, but the lace, stop and see the nice cluny pattern lace I found today. It is of uncommon quality, and can be secured for the surprising price of ten cents per yard.

Warm days and nights are hard for us grown-ups, it is true, but they seem to us infinitely harder for the little people. How often have you glanced at your young son's damp touselled curls as he lies in his little bed, and wished that you could sit up all night and fan him, or at least find a cooler spot for him. Of course, you want to leave his bedroom door open all night to let in as much air as possible, and, of course, you put a chair against the door, but picture his delight at having for a "cool" spot a troucoucou puppy, all white with brown ears sitting on a pink pillow. I saw one like that, and I immediately thought of nurseries and kiddies. The price is $2.25.

The well-dressed woman never overlooks the little accessories to her costume that go to distinguish between a perfectly groomed woman and merely her with pretty clothes. And she chooses wisely the little "extras," knows just where to find the best and the most distinctive additions to her gowns. In the matter of ties, for instance, they can, of course, be purchased anywhere. But for shimmering crepe de chine, for example, or for a tie with a distinctive color, none can touch the lovely ties I saw today. They are fifty cents, which is the usual price for the usual tie, but fifty cents for these ties is unusual because they are of superior quality and exceptional design. How about purchasing one for your tailored blouse, or that plain little summer frock?

For the names of shops where articles mentioned in "Adventures With a Purse" can be purchased, address Editor of Woman's Page, Evening Public Ledger, or phone the Woman's Department, Walnut 3000.

Sell Old Gold for War Fund The collection and sale of old gold and silver for a fund to be used in relief work is carried on by the Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Middletown, Conn. Jewelry that has been put away as useless is donated to this society. The collection is then taken by a reliable jeweler, who gives the value in cash.

First Steps Like a desert vast and cheerless Stretch the nursery lands. Who could gaze with vision fearless O'er those trackless sands? Though there waits a shelter peerless Mother's reaching hands.

Eyes alight with exultation. Lips that shape a shout; Just a fluttering hesitation, Just a sigh of doubt. Dare—and launch a generation— Sturdy legs set out. BURGESS JOHNSON

The Truth Comes Out

"WHAT does Mrs. Hicks say?" I asked, stepping in through the open door. My voice was low, controlled. But a white heat of anger lay beneath it. Each move with stealthy care; who reported it at once where it would make most trouble. I clung to the door. I had gone quite white, and I had grown weak from that moment of anger. Swiftly the thought started me. "Mrs. Hicks had seen me as I stooped to kiss Eddie's hand!" She had also seen me talking to the stranger at the gate. Seen and misinterpreted it all! "Prudence, get down," said Aunt Jennie. Her voice was low and very stern. "I feel that I must tell you—"

"No, no," demurred Aunt Letitia. Aunt Jennie silenced her with a look from her black eyes. I clasped my hands tightly in my lap. "That your heredity is not that of the ordinary girl. You must put a guard on yourself, watch yourself with the utmost care. I must know. The words came in a sudden rush. "There is a disgrace on my family—"

"No, child, no," said Aunt Letitia hurriedly. Again Aunt Jennie silenced her with a look. "Your father," said Aunt Jennie, and her words came slowly and with an effort. "Your father left your mother. Your mother died here, broken-hearted, and you, regretting to the last her capricious marriage—"

"No, no, Jennie," Aunt Letitia broke in. "She told me herself she would rather have married our first husband than any one else in the world!"

I thanked Aunt Letitia with a look. Aunt Jennie looked at her sister with hard eyes. "We have tried, Prudence, to bring you up in unworthy ways. We have tried to make you see what is right and your duty. So that, at times, when you have broken our hearts, we have felt it has been your unfortunate heredity, for which we are not responsible. "When have I broken out so?" I asked. "You would point, Prudence," Aunt Letitia answered. "We have tried to stop you time and time again. But you would go on—"

Aunt Jennie rose with a stiff rustle. I sat where they had left me. The light bush rustled against the house. I went to the open window and looked out into the starlit dusk. I had a secret that they would consider far more disgraceful than anything they had told me tonight. I was going to take money from a man—Dear Eddie—with no security, no promise, but my own ability to make good. "I would repay him," I vowed, there, in the soft darkness. And I saw his faded eyes light up again with the promise he had given me.
