

The Enemy Has Ears Everywhere

Much of Germany's military success rests on the elaborate system of espionage she maintains in every civilized country.

For years America has been infested by these treacherous agents of the "Beast of Berlin," who have kept Hindenburg and his General Staff informed of every military move made by this country.

Even now these spies are all around you. In spite of the vigilance of our able secret service, they still have secret means of sending information to Berlin.

Be on your guard at all times, workmen of Philadelphia.

If you are engaged in shipbuilding, if you are a munition worker, or if you are employed in any line that is engaged on Government contracts, never discuss your work with strangers.

Already these spies have caused the loss of hundreds of lives, and unless you are constantly on your guard, you may be the innocent means of sending many more Americans to their deaths. Remember, SECRECY MEANS SAFETY.

Then there is another kind of spy, the propagandist, doubly dangerous because he is so hard to detect.

These despicable agents of the Prussian war machine seek to sap America's military strength by hampering the work of preparation here.

They try to stir up dissatisfaction, and by every despicable, underhand means in their power, constantly seek to induce you to stop work.

They whisper that higher wages and an easier job await you in another city, that your boss is exploiting you for his own profit, when, as a matter of fact, most manufacturers are making stupendous sacrifices to help Uncle Sam win the war.

The boys over there can't win unless you supply them with rifles and ammunition, food and clothing. So stick to your job, men, for

The Man Who Throws Down His Tools Helps the Kaiser Just as Much as Though a Soldier Threw Down His Gun
