"I have made arrangements for that," returned Grant. "I was fortunate in inding that there were nearly forty operatives of the Secret Service in Portland, Boston and other points near East Machias, and shortly after I received your message I had them mobilize there, all of them ought to be there by now awaiting orders. That is the reason for dividing it into zones. Assigning two men to each zone will give each but about a mile and a half to cover. By the timewe reach East Machias the base probably will be definitely located."

Dixie said nothing more, but accompanied Grant to the telegraph room of the club while he filled messages of instructions to the force awaiting at East Machias.
