

TO STAY IN SCHOOL OR TAKE A WAR JOB?—CYNTHIA'S TALK TO GIRLS

YOUNG AMERICA MUST KEEP THE SCHOOL FIRES BURNING

A Little Letter Friend Wants to Leave in Her Sophomore Year to Take Up War Work—Tearing Down Something for Which Our Men Are Fighting

A SIXTEEN-YEAR-OLD girl, a sophomore in the high school term that begins this September, writes to know if it is the patriotic thing for her to stay in school or take a war job.

It is indeed hard to go back to books when the world is in the air. Patriotism, youth and the love of new paths that might never be open again are urging our girl to break away from the ordinary and do the extraordinary.

But if I were you or any of the other girls who are wondering about this same thing, I should do my best to keep you in school. I should say, "I stay because it is infinitely harder right now for you to return to your studies than it would be to take up any war work."

But I have said "the country should come first in wartime." Indeed, it should, and the very best way to put it first is to keep the home fires burning.

CHAPTER LXXXIX. COLONEL SOUTHARD did offer me a place as a stenographer on the paper and I accepted it, what is more, the whole business was settled before you could say Jack Robinson, or I bethought myself of anything else.

By this time I was out of debt. The superintendent of the Memorial Hospital, who had offered me a position for the service I had rendered in the spring, made only a small charge for my board and lodging.

An Interesting White Wool Jersey

A Daily Fashion Talk by Florence Rose

TO HEAR some people talk, the impression is sometimes given that all women are going about in "rackcloth and ashes." But the ambitious woman is making a greater effort than ever before to look her very best.

Women care not buying as many clothes as they did two years ago. By that I mean that each woman is restricting the number of garments which she buys.

Only yesterday I lunched on one of the roof gardens and saw many a good-looking model. I saw a most unusual dress. It could not have been a very cool frock for so brightly hot a day.

The skirt of the jersey was ornamented on either side by bands of the crocheted pattern about five inches wide.

Today I am showing you a fall suit imported from the house of Brant in Paris. The material is a beautiful quality of velour and is trimmed in beaver, this fur being used for the deep cuffs, wide revers and the adjustable collar.

THE DAILY NOVELETTE RUTH'S WEDDING DRESS

RUTH was making her wedding dress; a simple gown of fine sheer white organdy and network lace, just such a dress as she had dreamed of having ever since the day Alan White had put a little ring with the three little turquoises on her slender brown finger.

"Isn't it pretty?" she said, wistfully. "I'm real glad we made out to manage it. Your father thought at first that it was foolish to spend money on a wedding dress when you needed so many other things. But I insisted. I remember when I was married I wanted a white dress, too, but they all said it was child's play to get a black one."

"Dear me! There's Miss Helen coming across the field!"

"So Helen went home without having been taken into Ruth's confidence. Miss Helen nor any one else in the Westwoods was destined to see that dress of Ruth's."

"I was sorry to glad to see her. Her polished floors were covered with Chinese cups of the most beautiful brown water color. Each thing a treasure in itself. Around the perimeter of the room were low bookshelves overflowing with books."

"I cut this piece of bread, buttered it and made fingerlike sandwiches. As I came out of the pantry that strange sensation flooded me. Some-thing, some-thing I had done this very thing before! When? How? Then, like the glancing of a ripple, the sensation was gone. Yet the memory was strong of me. I had known all this some time."

"The clock on the mantel struck eight silvery notes. I started to my feet with a little cry. Tomorrow—The Tiny Secret."
