THE YOUTHS WHO TEACH THE GIRLS HOW TO SWIM

Nine Times Out of Ten They Take Their Pupils Out Beyond Their Depth-There Are Plenty of Giggly Squeals, but Drowning Is No Laughing Matter

"Did you see those fools?" the guard said. And that was all, but it was enough. We knew he did not say more because the little one-act drama out in the rolling surf was such an old, old story.

SWIMMING is a glorious thing. And a girl who knows how cannot count her riches. But—there is just one way to learn and that is in a couple of feet of calm water, where a beginner can always put one foot on the bottom in case of necessity. If a young man is perfectly willing to forego his own morning's swim in deeper water, stick close to the shore and patiently put a girl through her.

It is a life-guard's job.

It SEEMS such a pity that a girl, however light-hearted and giggly she may be about other matters, should be giggly about something so vital. She goes out beyond her depth when all that stands between her and never coming back is some youth who has no more common sense than to allow her to rome out with him.

The girl who knows how to swim is very sensible in the water. She knows her own limitations. It is the girl who has never taken the trouble to learn that makes life miserable for guards. It really behooves her to learn in a sane and sensible way, or to stand the opprobrium of 'the oth-

Dear Cynthia—As I am a steady reader of your paper and you have given others advice. I have come to you. I am a youngirl, eightuen years of age, considered rather good-looking. I have been much in the company of a young man one year my senior since March, 1917, and I love him dearly and think he loves me. I have decided to marry him. His folks are salisfied and everyhody in my family is favorably inclined, but my mother. She desires me to wait until the war is over. What would you notise me to do?

My dear, you are very young and you

My dear, you are very young and your mother knows you better than I do. There are very many things to consider in the matter and, as you both are so young, the reasons against stand out more than those for entering into the married state. You owe your mother a certain amount of consideration in the matter and had better listen carefully to her reasons against it. If you feel that you really cannot do without this young man, marry him, but it would be wiser for both to wait.
