To Make Fruit Leathers

To Make Fruit Leathers

Concentrate fruit juices by boiling them over direct heat, then by drying them over direct heat, then by drying them in the top of a double boiler or on platters or eramel pans set in a moderate oven. The juice is sufficiently concentrated when on cooling it makes a highly glazed, tough, dry, leathery jelly. Dry the leather in thin sheets and roll the sheets like jelly rolls, then out them across, or dry them into a sheet three-quarters of an inch thick, and cut that in cubes. In either of these forms the leather makes a tempting confection. Store in airlight containers or in a dry place.

Leathers are also made from unsweetened or slightly sweetened fruit puip. Peach leather is unsweetened peach marmalade dried in the oven, sprinkled with sugar, rolled and cut. Strawberry leather is made by crushing sweet, ripe strawberries, and drying them without cooking, in the oven.

The Story of the Girl Who Was Left Behind By HAZEL DEYO BATCHELOR

ARTICLE X

FTER a great many important hap-A penings, there is always a period devoid of any excitement at all. So it was with Ruth after she had made her decision. Day after day went by, each loved these letters from Scott. They told have more than she had ever known lazy and happy and filled with a strange contentment. Jack was with her almost the opportunity in the world to know him well. There is something about the constantly. They appeared everywhere together, and Ruth had no time to give to the strange twinges of conscience that had bothered her before Scott Raymond had left for camp. After thinking it all over, Ruth had decided not to say anything to Myra about Scott. Things might have gone on peacefully for an indefinite period had not Jack become impatient, and one night he unexpectedly demanded that Ruth set a definite date for their marriage.

Ruth had been dallying deliciously with the thought of marriage. Just marriage and its glamour of romance, "Well, I'm quite sure he sailed." Jack went on imperturbably, "but we'll know went imprerturbably, "but we'll know went in imperturbably, "but we'll know went on imperturbably, "but we'll know went in imperturbably, "but we'll know went on imperturbably, "but we'll know went in imperturbably, "but we'll know we'll in the distance that exists between two people distance that exists between two people distance that exists between two people distance that exists between two accounts and is something about the distance that exists between two accounts and in distance that exists between two accounts and in distance that exists between two accounts and in distance that exists between two accounts and its distance that exists between two accounts accounts and its distance that exists between two accounts and it

Jack was not an importunate lover. He was slow and deliberate, and Ruth's daintiness fascinated him. He made no effort to try to coerce her into a marriage. He was you tonight. I want you, dear, I wan you to marry me soon."

perhaps nothing would have happened. But as a matter of fact, all of these things did happen, one after another, and precipitated an issue that had been unconsciously diffting for some time.

"I know it." Ruth returned impatiently. "I had a letter from him just yesterday saying that he was coming up to say good-by." Ruth had not received many letters content to wait for a time at least, and in the meantime she practiced all kinds of petty tyrannies on him.

She had begun to purchase lacy things for her trousseau. Already the cedar chest that stood at the foot of her bed was half filled with lovely things all spicy with faintly perfumed sachets, some all mistily pink and others soft and white and bride-like. If Ruth had not shopped all of one afternoon and if something had not occurred during the evening that had made her thoroughly resentful, and if Jack had not been more than usually in love that evening, replace a celling would have heavened. me. Haven't we waited long enough?"

(in tomorrow's installment Ruth is stirred by two big events—the departure of Scott and the marriage of Helen Brander and Jim Townsend.)

management, relates the Woman Citt. zen, was given this summer at Cleveland, O., according to a statement made by Captain Boyd Fisher, of the war industries board, 717 Thirteenth street, Washington, D. C. This course gave actual factory work, besides class lectures and discussions to women who wished to enter the field of employment management, but who lacked the qualifications which relate to industrial experience. Living expenses and about $15 for books covered the necessary ex penditure, for the two months' course, and there was no tuition fee. Students and there was no fulfon fee. Students will be paid beginning wages of operators ($12 per week) in factories offering them practical experience.

Women are now admitted to courses in employment management at Rochester, Pittsburgh, New York and Boston. Applicants must be not under twenty-five years of age and must have had at least a high school education and three years actual experience in the factory.
