

BOUCHE FLEW LOW TO HIT HOSPITAL

Army Surgeon Writes of "Dastardly, Deliberate Attempt" to Bomb Wounded

Doctors Work Long to Save Lives and Mend Shattered Limbs After Attack

The stories of the bombing of a base hospital, where Americans wounded during the last German drive in July were being treated and of the killing and wounding of American boys who had worked hours into the night to relieve the sufferings of their comrades...

The bombing was a dastardly, deliberate attempt to bomb a hospital," he states, writing to his father, the Rev. Dr. J. Spangler Kieffer pastor of Zion Reformed Church at Hagerstown.

The letter gives something of an idea of the long hours these heroic doctors worked to save lives and mend shattered limbs.

Tells of Bombing

Of the bombing, he says: "On the night of the 15th of July, about 11 o'clock we had an unpleasant surprise. As I said, we had been operating since 2 a. m. and lots of wounded were awaiting operation outside. We heard the sound of a hoche airplane overhead, and the anti-aircraft guns began firing all around us. Presently we heard the plane come quite low, and then in quiet succession there were tremendous crashes as it dropped bombs right among our ward tents. There was the sound of breaking glass, as fragments of the bombs came through the windows of the operating room. Fortunately at night we had steel shutters closed inside the windows, and these prevented the fragments from coming into the room, or else there would have been casualties there."

Boy Terribly Mangled

"One poor boy was terribly wounded in the abdomen and chest. I operated on him immediately, but he was too badly hurt and died in a few hours. Another boy was hit in the leg, not only crushing the bone, but tearing the large vessels so that his leg had to be amputated. I had a letter from him the other day, saying that he was soon to be sent back home. He was from Delaware. Another boy was a fine young fellow from Pittsburgh, who had been one of our best orderlies in the operating room. He was going to study medicine and so took an intense interest in everything. That night he was walked into the operating room from his tent, where he slept, and made light of the fact that he had blood on his shirt, which showed that he had been wounded in the abdomen. The poor boy made a fine fight for life, but died in a week."

FORMER CITIZEN COMMENDED

Sergeant Garrison Led Charge on Machine Guns, Ignoring Wounds

Sergeant Frederick Rex Garrison, of Company A, 143d Infantry, a former resident of this city, but who has been living in New York for many years, has been commended for his gallant and heroic actions at Mezey Farm, near Vilers sur Perre, July 29, 1918, when you led a platoon against a German machine gun nest, reached the nest with only four men, captured seven prisoners and two guns, and, after being wounded twice, returned to your command after treatment and remained until his relief, has been brought to his personal attention, and he considers your performance of duty on this occasion worthy of the highest commendation. He regards your actions, in the face of the enemy, gallant, an example to your comrades in arms, and characteristic of that splendid standard upon which the traditions of our military establishment are founded."

Captain Describes Spirit of Pennsylvanians on Long March Through Night

News of more casualties among men of the 11th and 12th Infantry Regiments comes back from France with the story of the long, long night of marching into the front lines when these two regiments relieved the 10th and 11th on the Aisne-Marne front.

John Miller, of Athens, Pa., is one of the few of these Pennsylvania fighting men who have been wounded in the early fighting in this region and went to a base hospital. He was discharged from the hospital September 1 and shortly afterward went back to the firing line. Now he is in the front again recovering from another wound.

The story of the night when Pennsylvanians relieved the Americans, winding as quietly as possible down the long road under a thick blanket of darkness, is told by Captain John S. Douglas, of Charles Green, writing to friends in Scranton.

Men Were Dead Tired

The men were dead tired from long marching and several times fell asleep in their seats. But they insisted along, displaying the spirit that has made the men of the Iron Division models among the American soldiers.

"The Americans," he writes in closing, "are the most devilish, carefree but you ever saw."

Corporal E. Leroy Weiss, of Allen Hazel, was wounded by a shell according to a letter received by his parents, Private Dan Mitchell, of Brandy, Pa., was gassed, and is now recovering in a French hospital.

Private Daniel H. Harmon, Company M, 112th Infantry, was severely wounded September 5, according to a letter received by his mother in Lewistown. Earl Texard, of Lottsville, died of wounds, and Charles Lattimer, of Ruffsdale, was killed in action. Elmer Blank, of Scottsboro, is severely wounded, and Joseph Nuss, Jr., of Weathersville, has been killed.

Charles Smith, Company C, 11th Infantry, of Conellville, was killed in action, and Jefferson B. Mathews, of Uniontown, serving with the 10th Field Artillery, is wounded.

Reading casualties include: Frank Altmant, dead of wounds; John P. Haggerty, and Alfred J. Strausser, wounded; Alexander Child and John Marucki, missing; Corporal Irwin D. Grief, with the railway engineers, has been burned on the feet while at work back of the lines.

WAR NOT ALL HORRIBLE, WYNEWOOD BOYS WRITE

Robert and John B. Heyl Mention Lobster and Peach Melba

Grave of Richard S. Bullitt Visited—Many Acquaintances Found in Paris

In these words John B. Heyl, of Wynnewood, son of Robert C. Heyl, sums up his impressions of service in war-torn France. As a member of the 165th French Mortar Battery, which absorbed the remnants of the First City Troop of Philadelphia, Mr. Heyl is doing his bit for world freedom and in his own words, "enjoying the experience."

Despite the sacrifices, he is extremely happy, and in letters addressed to Philadelphia friends and relatives paints word pictures that bring with optimism and good cheer.

A brother, Robert C. Heyl, is a second lieutenant and now attending an anti-aircraft school near Paris. It is apparent that the Heyl brothers are natural soldiers, for they have no time for complaints and in letters to their parents omit the drab and depressing. Their letters are of unusual interest and will do much to allay the fears of anxious mothers, for both take time to mention lobster salads, ice cream sodas and good music in the Paris cafes.

War Has Light Side

They are in the war, but war with them has a light side and they prefer to dwell on that side rather than the hardships and worries.

John is twenty-five years old and enlisted in the First City Troop at the outbreak of the war. He is now a second lieutenant and has been in France since May.

Robert is three years younger and a graduate of Princeton and Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He went to France in June and won a second lieutenantcy and is now in a new branch of the service, one organized to combat the enemy airplane more effectively.

Today the parents of these soldiers received two letters from France. The father got one from Robert and Mrs. Heyl one from John.

The latter is on the front line, but prefers to describe his visits to towns behind the lines rather than to tell of his own exploits. On one of these visits he came to the grave of Richard Stockton Bullitt, of Philadelphia, who fell in one of the brilliant charges against the German hordes.

"He was buried very near the spot where he fell," says Mr. Heyl, "and his last flight must have been a glorious one. I shall never forget that scene. The new grave with a rifle stuck up in it, a canteen also on it containing his name and rank and surrounded by a bunch of flowers, a couple of whom had been his best friends. You cannot imagine what bravery our boys must have shown to have captured that hill. They have had to die and are still doing glorious work."

Insisted on Fighting

To those who flatter in the purchase of Liberty Bonds, Mr. Heyl sends a little message. It is a story of a game chap who insisted upon getting into the fight.

He had a chance to help out, but he wouldn't accept it. Mr. Heyl says: "Before I go on I must tell you what one of the fellows in our battery did. His name is Crozier, from Indiana, Pa. He came to us in August from the regiment station. His four front teeth protruded so much that he could not wear his gas mask properly and a couple of days before we left he was assigned to some hospital unit, as it would have been folly to bring him along with us."

The morning we left he turned up again with all his teeth, at least his four front ones, pulled out, and now he is with us. That certainly was nerve, says Mr. Heyl.

Robert Heyl, in the letter addressed to his father, describes a visit to Paris and takes pains to mention the good things he had to eat. He says: "Really, you find more people who know here in Paris than in any other locality. If you sit at the corner of Place de l'Opera and the Boulevard at one of the tables..."

Philadelphia!

The World is Watching what we are going to do for this Fourth Liberty Loan!

Shall the Hun gloatingly say: "We told you so! We knew they wouldn't stick it out! The case-loving Yankees will never sacrifice their pocketbooks to their patriotism!"

Shall our brave Allies who have borne the brunt of Hunnish hate, invasion, and devilry, for over four years, say with a sigh: "We had hoped great things from America?"

Shall our own magnificent army "over there" grimly read that the great civilian population back home think too much of their money to lend enough of it to equip, clothe, and feed their brothers on the firing line of civilization? Never!

We're going to lend our money to Uncle Sam as we never lent it before! We're going to do without things, that we may spare MORE money for Bonds! And we're going to do this because Germany must be licked so thoroughly that never again will her despotic military clique show its ugly head to mankind!

Are YOU with your city, your COUNTRY, in this high resolve! Then show it! Put down your John Hancock for ALL the Bonds you SHOULD buy!
