CITY OWES ITS THANKS TO VOLUNTEER NURSES

Those Who Stand on the Sidelines in Philadelphia's Tragic Drama Tangled Fortunes and the Realize All the Big Brave Hearts Are Not Fighting in France

THE response of the women in Philadelphia to the call for volunteers to help conquer the influenza ile is a marvelous example of what women will do when the big noment for doing comes. You can say a great deal about woman; how she loves a new hat; how she puts the bloom of youth on her cheeks; how she shows the claws of a cat sometimes, but you cannot say she will not roll up her sleeves and be willing to give herself to the last inch in the cause of a stricken city.

ATIME like this has been unpar-A filled in the modern history of our city. The women who have responded to the call and are responding have never done anything in their lives be for each as they are doing now. They are scrubbing floors, giving baths to sick women and children; they have ministered to the dying and in many cases made it possible for the lying to live on and get well.

To still reason Philadelphia, is larged up in every one string is larged up in every one else. If the room is kept dark except for the asupreme vote of thanks and admiration to the women who have bravel all to not as volunteer helpers. More Workers Wanted

The Emergency Aid needs more columteers in the fight against influenza. The need is urgent. You can be used morning, moon or night and for only a few hours at a time if that is all you have to give. If you are afraid to come in contact with the disease the card of service issued to you makes note of the fact and you are given one of the John that do not call for association with patients.

At the end of pieces of long string at-tach fortunes for each one of the guests. Hide the fortunes, which should be wrapped up in pieces of orange-colored cibbon, in different parts of the room or as many rooms as you want the party to be given in. Now tangle the strings and bring them all into one part of a room. When the guests arrive, or at any time in the evening, give each guest the end of one of these strings, the end without the fortune tied to it. Tell them to then go seek their fortunes. The mixuos and entanglements that re-ministered to the dying and in many cases made it possible for the lying to live on and get well.

It is not possible to say all who have had time have sprung into this heartrending breach. Some of those for instance, who took the firstall course with the intention of making themselves useful on the battlefields of France have been obliged to sit back in counting the crepes on our city's doors and to only shudder in watching the emergency ambulances and hearses rush by. In thousands of cases the families of these girls and nurse influenza cases have risen unin revolt and forbidden such procedure. That is understandable.

In other cases women who would have worked hard all day, who have had bad colds and feared the emergency nurse might all too suon become the patient.

THE DAILY NOVELETTE A BIT OLD-FASHIONED By A. C. Leonard

HAZEL DEFREY was seated in a quiet, secluded nook on the border of a tiny lake. She was thinking "Oh? she said, half to herself and half aloud." If I was only like other girls. If I wasn't so old-fashloned. But what's the use of wishing. Mother has brought me up this way and I wouldn't change—no, not for the world. Mother is a dear, and she has been such a pal to me." Notwithstanding what she had said, there was a very faraway look in Hazel's eyes as she watched the bright-colored canoes gilds gracefully across the lake, which could have been translated into this: "No, I'm satisfied with this life; but I like to have a good time once in a while like the other girls."

Ever since Hazel could remember she had been carefully protected by a loving mother, who had been very strict with her—but any little fairy could have told you that it had not spofied her in the least.

She was very sweet to look upon—even if her dresses were not made according to the fashlon plates in the latest magazines—even if her har was dressed so very, very plainly. She had heavenly blue eyes and a very delicate profile.

boild, to take the liberty of seeing you home. May I have permission to call some evening?"

Hazel told him (all the while blushing prettily) that she had enjoyed the ride immensely and would be delighted to have him call.

Her mother, on meeting Mr. Benton next day, was satisfied that he was a fit companion for Hazel—just the kind of young man she should have liked to have for a son.

The canoe ride that evening was followed by many, many more, and before the summer was over Hazel wore a beautiful ring on the third finger of her left hand.

"Do you know, dear," sa'd Mr. Benton one day as they flew swiftly along the blue, rippling water, 'why I cared for you from the very first? It was because you were just a bit old-fashioned."

And Hazel, the happient girl in the whole world, was glad that her mother had brought her un as she had.
