

WOMEN MAKE MERRY THROUGH HAPPY MIST OF TEARS—CYNTHIA'S LETTERS—MILITARY SUITS

THE WORLD'S HEARTACHE IS HEALED THIS GLAD DAY

And Woman Makes Merry Through the Queerest Mist of Tears She Has Ever Had the Joy to Know—"I Have a Boy Over There and He Is Coming Home!"

WOMEN who sent their boys away to the rest of the world to laugh and for joy, while all the country is going mad with joy, the women who whistle and sing the songs of the boys, the women who have stretched out in his manly grave and they slip down and his strange line on the back, but they are merrily through the queerest mist of tears a woman ever had the joy to know.

"I have a boy over there," I heard a woman cry out through her tears, and he's coming home.

WHAT TO PUT INTO THE OVERSEAS BOX

A Little Silver Cigarette "Roller" and Other Things the Soldier Will Like

The question of what to put in the overseas box is a most serious one, for when with aunts and cousins and sisters all clamoring to put something for "him" in that small receptacle, one is hard put to it to know how to manage. It is said that fruit cake is particularly desired by our boys. Well, now, fruit cake carries well, and a pound of it would still leave room for some other gifts in the box. One of the shops is offering some particularly tempting cake for twenty-five cents a pound. Why not get him a pound?

There are times when reading falls and writing letters, sometimes doesn't "roll" when time hangs heavily, and that is when your soldier would appreciate a poem. After all, they're not grown up children, and a wealth of fun and entertainment may be had out of the simplest, easiest games. Take dominoes, for instance. Many a minute could be saved by having a domino game by the game of miniature dominoes which is being shown by one of the shops.

There's to the mothers, the wives and the sweethearts whose boys are sleeping in France. They have paid the price with the same old coin as the soldier of the world has paid for the price of the price. They have paid the price of the price. They have paid the price of the price.

A MILITARY SUIT THAT IS OF VELVET

This suit in dark blue velvet—smacks of the military. The military braid is applied in typical military fashion.

A Daily Fashion Talk by Florence Rose

There has been the slightest doubt in my mind that the majority of women like to wear uniforms. Not that I think that every woman wishes to wear just what all her sisters are wearing, which is the general impression when one speaks of the uniform. This should be called "militarized dress," not uniform. Uniformity we see it today, stands for other sorts. I have my opinion on the fondness for the uniform, as well as the dislike of women to wear exactly the same sort of clothes, by the great variety of uniforms that one sees these days.

Warmth for Our Old Couple

The readers of the column will be interested to hear of the following kindess extended to the old couple whose case was recently cited here. The Needlework Club, Holmesburg branch, gave to them the following articles: For the old lady, who is eighty-four years old and supporting her husband, two flannel petticoats, two sets of heavy underwear and six pairs of stockings; for the old man, who is ninety and bedridden, two woolen undershirts and two pairs of woolen stockings. These garments were all hand made and were prepared in a commendable way by Mrs. Charles Wozler, of 3027 Rhawn street, who is a director of the Holmesburg branch of the Needlework Club.

THE DAILY NOVELETTE THE BIRD-SEED TRAIL

By Grace O. Wetherby

DOROTHY MOORE ran joyfully up the stairs to the library. It was her birthday, and she was delighted to find that she was kept in a state of happy excitement all the time. Now, at seven o'clock, she decided that she must rest a bit, and, thinking her best book under her arm, started for the library. But her mother called her before she reached the top of the stairs. "Dorothy, dear child, you really ought to go and get some birdseed for your new canary. The poor little thing will starve. You had better go now. A few minutes later, Dorothy was hurrying down the stairs with her book, thinking at the same time of the birdseed. She bought two pounds of birdseed, paying for herself at the time that two pounds ought to last one a long time. As she left the store she was rudely jostled by a stout woman with a large basket full of goods. The woman was protesting loudly, and Dorothy, who was used to being jostled, did not mind. She went on her way home. When she reached the house she heard a noise of merry laughter coming from the parlor, and she went in to see what was going on. Her mother and father were sitting at the table, and Dorothy was standing behind them. They were all laughing at something Dorothy had said. Dorothy was a little surprised, but she did not mind. Fritters, a Scallop, Potpie and Others You Will Like to Try. Value of Oysters as a Meat Substitute

THE date of the oyster is in full swing and utilized for food in many ways has a special value in that a moderate quantity will impart a good oyster flavor to a considerable amount of other food material and so make a very palatable dish at moderate cost.

Oysters can be placed on the list of most substances, as they supply the same kind of food to the body. They may be served in many ways, raw, steamed, broiled, baked or fried.
