CITY MAY ALTER CONTRACT PLANS

May Arrange for Time Extensions Instead of Cancellations

PRICES LIKELY TO DROP

War's End Will Change Material and Labor Market Conditions, It Is Believed

The end of the world war finds Counells preparing to cancel municipal improvement contracts involving many millions of dollars. Time extensions will probably be resorted to instead of cancellations in all but the transit contracts with the Keystone State Construction Company.

Another effect of the close of the war on municipal undertakings will be no-ticed in 1919 finances. The budget now being prepared is based upon the highest prices for materials and labor, and if the members of Councils' Finance Com-mittee allow the sums asked for supplies, etc., departments are likely to find them selves with large balances in some items because of altered prices.

Contractors and their surety nies have been extremely anxious to b relieved from agreements affecting bridge and sewer construction and highway work on the Northeast Boulevard. During the closing months of the war, when prices for material and labor were at their highest, very little permanent improvement work was done by contractors in the hope of making satisfactory financial settlement with the city and of being released from further resonsibility. released from further responsibility.

Keystone's Contracts

Keystone's Contracts

The Keystone State Construction Company's transit contracts provide for the completion of the subway work under City Hall, the building of the Arch and Locust streets subway and the Thompson street sewer. Plans for a release of the company and a payment by the city of a half million dollars in settlement are now before Councils and may be approved November 21.

Opposition to this settlement is expected from members opposed to perpected from members opposed to permitting the National Surety Company and other bonding concerns escape from repayment to the city any part of the premium paid them as surety for the faithful performance of the work. Mayor Smith, as Chief Executive of the city. approved the plan that calls for no premium repayment. As head of the Thomas B. Smith Bonding Company he enjoys his share of the profits from such

Whether the opposition to the annul ment proves powerful enough to defeat the present plans of canceling entirely the transit undertakings will be shown from the final rollcall when the settlement is called up in the form of an ordinance. Councilmen opposed to the settlement in its present form argue that it will establish a precedent that will negative councilment the settlement in the settlement in the settlement is settlement. permit bonding companies in the re to escape scot-free from responsiity on municipal bonds.

Among Other Projects

Other projects that contractors are anxious to abandon upon a satisfrictory financial settlement include construction work on the Northeast Boulevard, a new bridge on Bensalem p'ke, sewage disposal work in connection with the new plant in the north section of the and a number of others. Most of se are in process of settlement and ir abandonipent or partial abandon-it leaves the Department of Public ment leaves the Department of Public Works with little to do aside from routine work and small construction problems arising from work incident to the war-time growth of the city. Although nothing definite has been decided by trusted with the task of making the settlements relative to these contracts, the suggestion has been made that the contractors be granted time extensions and a final settlement, based on after-the-war prices.

COAL RECONSIGNMENT HALTED

Shipments From Original Destination Points Prohibited in Future

in Future

Reconsigning coal shipments from original points of delivery without proper authority from the fuel administration was summarily halted today by an order issued to all producers and distributions by the Federal anthracite committee.

Such reconsignments have been made frequently, said a statement from the committee, and were not reported. The fuel authorities, therefore, had no knowledge of the ultimate destination of the coal. This practice is in violation of the rules of the fuel administration. To make reconsignments in the future it will be necessary to obtain the written consent of the original shipper.

The committee today notified all fuel administrators in the State that until further notice they can permit forists to burn bituminous coal, steam anthracite or coke breeze without having such fuel supply on their 50 per cent quota, as defined by the fuel administration order of April 24, 1918.
