Essick B. Wright, Descendant of Men Who Fought for Colonies

FATHER IN CIVIL WAR

Twenty-seven From This District Reported Dead in Today's Casualty List

Corporal Essick B. Wright, of Company M, 109th Infantry, wounded during the battle of the Meuse, is the third generation of his family to serve in the old First Regiment, N. G. P. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. G. P. Wright, of 2429 North Nineteenth street.

When the Third was guarding bridges throughout the State, just after Congress declared war on Germany, Corporal Wright did sentry duty at a bridge near Harrisburg which his grandfather, Paul J. Wright, had guarded during the Civil War.

Philadelphia has given more than 60,000 men to the army, navy and marine corps, of which number 191 have been killed in action or have died of wounds or disease while with the colors. About 3000 have been wounded or taken prisoner. More than 8000 National Guardsmen have gone to France from this city.

There are 1041 names on the combined casualty lists today, including 144 Pennsylvanians. The total from Philadelphia and vicinity is sixty-five, nineteen having been killed in action, five having died of their wounds and three from disease. One has been accidentally killed, eighteen have been wounded, one gassed and six are missing.

The four sons of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Roberts, of 4906 Klugestown avenue, entered the service of their country shortly after the United States declared war against Germany. The private John E. Roberts, was sent overseas with the headquarters company of the 114th Infantry and was killed during the crossing of the Meuse by the American forces. The others are still in this country.

Robert O. Roberts being attached to the military police force in Washington and the Roberts with the coast artillery at Camp Eustis, Va., and Albert Roberts in a replacement company at Camp Greenleaf, Ga.

THE DAILY NOVELETTE

A COMPLETE SURRENDER By Lizzie M. Peabody

As Ned had been discharged from the hospital and advised to spend two weeks in the country, he considered himself very fortunate in being accepted as a guest by Mrs. M. and her daughter, Hetty. He had fallen in love with Hetty at sight, and she knew it.

The knowledge made no particular difference to her, except to cause her to perversely determine to see him as little as possible during his stay. Although afterward she accorded him a grudging admiration, admitting that he was both gentlemanly and fine-looking, up to within a few days of the end of his stay she had adhered to her determination.

As she was usually back from morning until night she had little trouble in keeping out of his way; but one day she saw her waiting in the orchard and quickly started to join her.

He had hardly reached her side, however, before words and yells added to the indescribable noise made by an angry hen, issued from the poultry house, and then a shot rang out from his nest; and an exciting battle was on between an old broody hen and the kitten.

Hetty captured the kitten and carried it to the house, accompanied by a disappointed and angry hen, who more frequently after that, but mischievously Hetty delighted in talking of the numerous wounds which the kitten, or of any subject except the one on which she was talking, and with the innocent and goodly of Tough Luck thoroughly enjoyed herself.

One day he brought blueberries, and Hetty, unusually grateful, had proceeded to make her little kitten a treat, but declining assistance she had quickly built a wood fire, and began getting together the ingredients for the biscuits.

He watched Hetty's slipping about the kitchen, her eyes wide and her cheeks like roses, and decided that with the biscuits safely in the oven the ideal moment would be reached when the biscuits were already in the pan, when the familiar cry of Tough Luck in trouble was plainly heard, and Hetty began looking for him.

Having searched everywhere without success, with both hands on her forehead she opened the oven door and out sprang Tough Luck, who for a moment did a somersault and landed on the floor, looking up, but more frightened than hurt, and Ned, waiting only to learn this, losing all patience, strode from the room and slammed the door.

"Well, kittykins!" Hetty said to the purring kitten, "would you please to look at his face that I had put you in the oven to torment him? Then she sat down and laughed until she cried.

But two days more of his fine remained, and Ned, driven to desperation, grimly declared to himself that a little violet-eyed girl and a tiger kitten should no longer triumph over him.

"Over there" he had been cited for coolness under fire and great courage; he surely must show more courage now, he told himself. He was thoroughly warmed up, but more frightened than hurt, and Ned, waiting only to learn this, losing all patience, strode from the room and slammed the door.

litten must have entered, he saw that the yard was as light as day, although there was no moon. The house was on fire! Making a grab for his clothes, he was undressed and proceeded to awaken the household, while Tough Luck contentedly followed at his heels.

The fire was fortunately confined to one part of the house, but it was morning before the flames were extinguished. Ned's hair was singed, and he had lost an eyebrow and part of his mustache. Otherwise he was undamaged, with the exception of a burned hand, the pain of which he was just beginning to notice, when he discovered that it was nearly 9 o'clock, and remembered his promise.

Collapsing, signed and smothered, he might well have been executed for waiting until he was more presentable, but curiously enough at this time words came to him which he remembered to have heard just before he and two others charged a German machine-gun nest and captured the gun and its crew. The words were these: "The gods favor the fearless. Push on and win. Now!"

He suddenly recalled that there was a great difference between that occasion and this; but decided to take the advice.

How to Prevent infection from SPANISH INFLUENZA

The Surgeon General of the U. S. Army urges you to keep the mouth clean. This dreaded disease is taken into the system through the nose and mouth. Keeping the mouth and throat clean isn't simply using a tooth brush and ordinary dentifrice, but means a thorough, efficient mouth cleansing. A few drops of in a half glass of water forms a foaming, bubbling mouth wash that is highly antiseptic, cleanses thoroughly, and renders pernicious germs harmless. This tried and true preparation will not entirely prevent Spanish Influenza, but it will prove a wonderfully potent preparation for preventing its infection, by keeping the mouth and throat clean and healthy.

Sozodont, with sixty years' success back of it, will eliminate tiny food deposits, keep the teeth white and attractive, neutralize the mouth acids and strengthen the gums.
