ANTI-CHILD LABOR HOG ISLAND TASK MOVE IN SCHOOLS TO END IN AUGUST

Leaders Enlist Aid of Teachers to Check Industry's Reids

DANGERS POINTED OUT

Pupils and Parents Must Be Warned, Say Campaigners

To combat the evils of child labor and induce Philadelphia parents to keep their boys and girls in school, the public education and child labor association of Pennsylvania and the national child labor committee today opened a campaign in the Philadelphia public schools.

Literature on the child labor subject has been forwarded by these organizations to every teacher and today the instructors of public schools will give their pupils leaflets and talk, urging them not to leave school and explaining the dangers of an unfinished education.

The purpose of the campaign is to overcome the attraction of industry for school children.

Holman White, district superintendent of public schools, asserts that a vast army of school children is illegally employed in industrial plants and especially at Hog Island.

White also asserts that a well-organized effort is being launched to reveal and stop child labor at the next session of the Legislature.
