

SUGAR RESTRICTIONS STILL MORE MODIFIED

Four Pounds a Month a Person and Increase for Restaurants

Householders will be allowed four pounds of sugar a month for each person in the family, beginning December 1. Restaurant and public eating houses will also be allowed four pounds of sugar for each ninety meals, beginning the same date. This is an advance of one pound a month in the allotment now in force.

This announcement was made today by Jay Cooke, Federal food administrator for Philadelphia. Mr. Cooke issued this statement:

"For December soft drink manufacturers will receive approximately 25 per cent of their average monthly consumption during July, August and September.

Candy makers

All other manufacturers rated as class A and listed as less essential industries, such as makers of candy, chocolates and soda water, are to receive their monthly consumption in full, making this open their average monthly consumption in the last six months of 1918 and 1917. This regulation goes into effect immediately.

"The manufacturers of essential goods known as class B, which includes foodstuffs in general, always have been allowed their full requirements of sugar, so that the new regulation will not affect them in any way.

"As these regulations go into effect immediately, in so far as the manufacturers are concerned, although not until December 1 with respect to private consumers and public eating houses, candy administrators are authorized to issue at once such additional certificates as may be necessary. December certificates may be obtained immediately.

Increase for Bakers

"Bakers are now entitled to receive an increase of 50 per cent over the amount of sugar they received for November, and candy manufacturers will not be required to surrender sugar certificates on account of condensed milk used as has been the case heretofore.

"The restrictions governing persons desiring to enter the bakery or confectionery manufacturing business are removed by the fact that such persons can receive sugar by making applications to the food administrators of the county in which they desire to manufacture.

ASK PUBLIC'S VIEWS ON STREET CLEANING

Mass-Meeting to Consider New Specifications Said to Favor Contractors

Every business men's association, civic association or individual interested in clean streets is invited to attend an open meeting Monday afternoon at the Chamber of Commerce, at which Mayor Smith is expected to explain changes in the 1918 street cleaning specifications and to receive suggestions for their improvement or modification.

Director Batesman, author of the new specifications, will most likely act as spokesman for the Mayor. He will explain that contractors this year could not obtain the required number of men and that it is not believed that enough men can be obtained next year to come up to the number required in former years for the various districts. The Director will further explain that the city expects to save money by giving the contractors full control of street cleaning.

The new specifications, which, despite the fact that bids will be opened next Tuesday, have been severely guarded by their originators, are away with many of the safeguards through which contractors have been protected in the past and are full of many business restrictions that contractors were forced to live up to when chief of the Highway Bureau William H. Connor was in charge.

Former chief engineer, when part of the contract, said: "Under the restrictions in the specifications when I was in charge labor and equipment standards have been lowered. It makes a man that can't do the job. Under the old specifications city officials could have broken or backstopped any contractor who fell behind in his work. Under the new, an expert or two contractors can do about what they please. With favorable city officials the contractors will be very much on top and it is not hard to forecast what will happen."

Most business organizations are already on record as opposing the letting down of the street cleaning bars, and any explanation that Mayor Smith or Director Batesman may have will be listened to with interest by those who attend the meeting.
