EXPECT MARKET TO REMAIN DULL

Money Conditions Responsible for Inactivity, Says Broker—City Bond Prices Interest

When asked his opinion of stock market conditions yesterday a well known broker said: "There is no market, and the reason is, the money conditions." Not for some time has the stock market been so dull and uninteresting as yesterday and no immediate change is expected in the next few days, at least.

The high premium commanded by the sale of the $7,000,000 City of Philadelphia bonds, still continues to be a fertile subjecte of discussion in the financial district. While there are many who claim the price paid was too high, there are as many who say it is right, and compares favorably with the present quotations of other city bonds now outstanding. It is generally acknowledged that only a large institution like the Guaranty Trust, of New York, could take such a large issue at the price, as it could easily absorb the whole $7,000,000 itself, but it is said that already it has sold several large blocks at a small margin of profit.

A downtown broker said today that he found many investors in a skeptical frame of mind regarding "Distillers" and Industrial Alcohol securities. The impression has got abroad, he said, that with the present wave of prohibition sweeping over large sections of the country the profits from these two and kindred concerns must diminish almost to the vanishing point. As a matter of fact, he remarked, prohibition or no prohibition will have a very insignificant effect on the products of these concerns, as since the war they have developed new products which bring them into competition with the Standard Oil. At the present stage of the matter, he said, experiments are in progress to reduce the cost of alcohol so as to place it in direct competition with gasoline as a motor fuel. These experiments, it is understood, have been very successful, and as the price of gasoline increases the cost of alcohol decreases, till at no distant date both will be on a par. But, as time goes on, the yield of petroleum decreases, with no hope of replacing it; whereas each day almost increases the supply of material from which alcohol can be manufactured. In fact, he concluded, I look for the time when the alcohol stocks will rank higher than oil stocks. And one thing is certain, they are essentially peace stocks.

A certain banker who was fearful of the conditions which he anticipated would be produced through the closing down of many war industries and the throwing of so many of the unemployed on the country during the coming winter was in a very different frame of mind when seen today.

He said he understood that the United States employment service has been canvassing the war industries to find out what workers they are planning to release, and from 100 replies to 500 questionnaires on the subject it had received the answer, "None." In fact, five of these industries had asked specifically for more hands. Up to date no industry had indicated it had workers to release.

Again, a second questionnaire was sent to 500 peace industries asking what workers they needed. Forty of these industries had replied to date asking for 21,000 men and women, skilled and unskilled.

"I guess the matter will regulate itself," he remarked.

A prominent investment banker said today that any one who expects to see an army of unemployed walking the streets, or the establishment of soup kitchens, is going to be disappointed. We successfully met unusual conditions in a masterly way when the war broke out. We were again equal to every occasion when we joined the Allies, and there is not the slightest doubt that any conditions we will be called upon to meet now will be met in the same manner, he said.

According to several leading banking and investment houses, many investors are turning from the stock to the bond market. It is still a question whether the time is ripe for large issues of long time maturities. One of the most conservative bankers in the downtown district said he did not think the time had arrived yet; in any event, he remarked that he had not heard of any concern about to make the experiment. They all seem to be waiting for the "other fellow" to try his luck first, although every indication points to large sums awaiting investment in this city.

On the subject of bonds Frederick Carles, of Edward B. Smith & Co. says:

"Bonds remain cheap, but very scarce—two very good reasons why they should sell higher before long. Everybody who has watched the investment markets has observed the steady withdrawal of underlying steam railroad issues of recognized merit, but possibly also may have seen a preference for bonds of low interest rate. There is economy in income taxes to be found in low interest bonds of which many well to do people have taken advantage. There is nothing strange about the advances we have seen in the prices of many of the best bond issues. The quotations of recent months have been made on offerings of small lots. The offerings even have been timidly made in many instances, and there have been innumerable cases where bonds were withdrawn as soon as a buyer appeared.

"There is much indication that new offerings of securities of well known corporations at anything like liberal interest rates will be well taken just the same as there is much promise that the institutions may be back in the market before many months.

"Investment bankers will do well to consider the influence of the Liberty Loans, not necessarily to the extent that they introduced bond buying to the multitude, but to the fact that they placed bonds in the hands of many people in comfortable circumstances who had not previously made investment in bonds.

"Naturally much investment business depends on the money situation, and best opinion seems to be that in time, when business people have recovered from the shock of sudden peace, money will become more plenty, and, of course, easier as to rate."

Favorable comment was heard in the street over the successful outcome of the offering of $20,000,000 Liggett-Myers Tobacco three-year 6 per cent notes which were reported to have been about six times oversubscribed. So great was the influx of subscriptions that it was necessary to immediately close the books after their opening, and it is evident that allotments will necessarily be cut down to a considerable extent.

In the trade yesterday it was stated there has been a slowing down of activity, although prices were not materially changed from those obtaining last week. A generally hopeful feeling was entertained in banking and investment circles over the outlook and predictions were made that a satisfactory market will obtain during the next several months.

Foreign Government bonds maintained their previous strength, although these issues were less active than during the last couple of weeks. With the exception of the Anglo-French 5s only a moderate turnover was recorded in these issues.

United States Government Liberty Loan 4¼s held steady to close at 98. It is evident that these bonds will not recede materially from that level, as the prevailing quotations has ranged within a radius of a small fraction of 98 ever since the subscription books were closed.

Deaths of a Day

John D. Avil

John D. Avil, a retired printer and publisher, for many years head of the John D. Avil Company, died yesterday at his home in Glenolden, after an illness of several months. He was in his sixty-ninth year. Mr. Avil is survived by his wife, a daughter, Mrs. C. S. Kates, and two sons, Howard Avil and Frank Avil. Some years ago Frank Avil was a star pitcher of the University of Pennsylvania baseball team.

When a young man John D. Avil conducted a stationery store in Fortieth street, near Market. Later he established a large printing plant in West Philadelphia, and published "The Telephone" and many subscription books. Mr. Avil, who was a prominent Baptist, was one of the founders of the Chester Avenue Baptist Church. He was a member of the St. Paul's Lodge, No. 161, F. and A. M.

SHIP NEWS

APPEAL FOR LOYALTY TO SHIPMEN'S ARMY

Spirit of Workers Makes Machinery Go, Asserts Chester Official

Though the war is over, the shipbuilding army must "carry on," R. H. M. Robinson, president of the Chester Shipbuilding Company, in the birthday issue of the yard paper, the Compass, has issued a stirring appeal for continued loyalty and service by ship workers.

"Loyalty demands that we think of ourselves, not merely as to shipbuilders, but as loyal soldiers in the great shipbuilding army, with particular pride in our own regiment," says Mr. Robinson.

"The thing that makes the company is not the plant or the equipment and machinery, but the spirit of the men and women that make the machinery go."

There is much shipbuilding history associated with the Chester company yard, which is the development of the old Roach yard, for years a mainstay in naval construction in this country.

Much of this history is published in the anniversary issue of the Compass.

In the old yard of John Roach there were turned out many of the old steel steamships—the first of their day. Their builder won the title "The Father of American Iron Shipbuilding." His steamships were unsurpassed in strength and finish.

CUBA PROVES LIBERALITY

Oversubscribes Quota in United War Work Fund

Special Cable to Evening Public Ledger

Copyright, 1918, by New York Times Co.

Havana, Nov. 20.—As she went over the top in the Liberty Loan campaign, so Cuba has done in the united war work fund campaign, having oversubscribed her quota of $100,000 by $5,000.

With the campaign not closing until tonight and many points in the interior not heard from, Campaign Director Hubbard predicts that the subscription will reach $125,000 by tonight.

Nation to Have Food-Saving Week

"Allied world relief week" will begin December 1. A special message from Herbert Hoover will be read in all the churches. During the week a message will be sent before all fraternal and other organizations. Every day large public meetings will be held under supervision of the food administrations of the various counties and the urgency of the food crisis and the necessity for the strictest conservation will be brought directly to the attention of the people.

SHORTER LIFE FOR NEW WAR BONDS

Issues Will Be Smaller and Maturity May Range From Three to Eight Years

Washington, Nov. 20.

Government war bond selling in the future will be along distinctly new lines. Bonds will have short maturities, and Secretary McAdoo explained today that by this is meant from three to seven or eight years. In addition, issues will be smaller than in the past, and probably will be marketed more continuously.

War savings organizations throughout the country will assist in placing the bonds, Mr. McAdoo said, in more direct manner than in past Liberty Loan campaigns. The 4¼ per cent interest rate borne by the last two issues of Liberty Bonds may be changed, depending on other terms of the securities.

Amounts of future issues, interest rates and time of marketing cannot be determined definitely for another month or two, but the heavy oversubscription of the fourth Liberty Loan, with a total of $6,989,047,000, or 16.48 per cent more than the six billions sought, will enable the Treasury to postpone the next issue longer than otherwise. It still is expected by spring.

National managers of the war savings movement conferred today over plans for further consolidating war savings and Liberty Loan committees in each locality in preparation for the next issue of bonds.

WORLD'S BUSIEST "CENTRAL"

26,000 Calls Daily Through Hog Island Telephone Echange

The nerve center of Hog Island.

That is how the big telephone switchboard at the shipbuilding yard is characterized by officials. Forty girls are busily engaged in handling the thousands of calls from all parts of the country as well as from the various departments of the island.

It is said to be the busiest private branch in this country. More than 26,000 calls are handled over the wires daily. The exchange links together 5844½ miles of wire now in use throughout the yard. Altogether 2,319 miles of extension lines have been laid.

There are eighty trunk lines leading from the yard to the outside world. Fifty of these are linked with the Tinicum exchange; thirty through the Locust exchange and five are long distance loops. There are 1232 stations and 420 extensions now in use on the switchboard.

A. Hoopes, of the Chester Shipbuilding Company, is reputed to know more about pipe fitting than any man in the yard. Hoopes is now quartermen on Hull 344.

Another celebrity. P. J. Collins, the "record king" boiler-up of the Chester company, is a cousin of an ex-Mayor of Boston, Patrick J. Collins. The shipfitter has a new wrinkle in putting plates up, therefore he has issued a challenge that his gang can "spot" other crews a few "ares" and still beat them at the finish.

"Doc" Cody, another Chester yard shipfitter, does not intend to remain in the yards all his life. Nix! He is burning much midnight oil studying medicine.

When you hear shipworkers speak of "forepeak squirrels," "tank lizards" and "rain worms," they are not referring to what they have seen in a "zoo," but what is visible in a shipyard. For instance, Joe Jackson, of the Harlan yard, is chief forepeak squirrel, and mightily proud of the title.

Here is another shipworker who is going to match his weekly pay envelope against the "high cost of existence." He is Mr. Otto Wagner, of the Harlan yard. After a flying trip on the "honeymoon express," the Wagners will occupy a little nest on Pennsylvania avenue, in the shipyard village.

Shipworkers at the Harlan yard complain that the coffee served in the yard restaurant keeps them awake every afternoon thus [illegible] sleepy.

BUSINESS CAREER OF PETER FLINT

A Story of Salesmanship by Harold Whitehead

CCXLIX

I'VE got a peach of a cold. I've got the shivers or something, but just the same I feel real stuck on myself.

When I got to Frascati's this morning he and three or four other fellows were waiting for me.

"Good morning, gentlemen," I said. It wasn't a good morning, for that matter, for it was still raining, and for the third day in succession I was beastly wet.

I felt like a traveling sponge as I huddled up against the radiator, for my teeth were chattering with the cold and the wet.

After I got a bit warmer Frascati said to me: "Well, Friend Flint, I think we'll be able to do business with you, after all. We've decided to take those two blocks which we looked at."

My heart sank for a minute, and I said: "Two lots, you mean, don't you, Mr. Frascati?"

"No; two blocks," he said, smiling.

"Two blocks!" I gasped. "Why—that's—er—let me see—there's forty-two lots in the one block and forty-four in the other. Why, that's eighty-six lots!"

I couldn't help it. I took an envelope out of my pocket and began to figure up how much eighty-six times $125 was. When I got the total I couldn't help saying: "Mr. Frascati, you—you know how much this comes to? Ten thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars."

"Quite right," he nodded his head vigorously. "That's just what we make it. But we'll only give you $10,600. We feel that on account of buying so much we are entitled to that small discount."

"I can fix that all right," I said. "I'm sure. Shall I make out the contract now?"

He nodded, so I proceeded to fill out the contract blank, all the time feeling that there must be some mistake somewhere. When it was filled in Frascati and two others signed it on behalf of the Italian Association. Then Frascati told me they were contemplating building a lot of summer cottages there where the various members of their association would go during the summer months.

"We will pay $2500 cash," he said, "and $2500 a month until it is paid for, and you can have your first check as soon as your Mr. Lee agrees to the sale."

It didn't take me long to get back to Lee's office. He was in and agreed to the discount if I would split the $250 with him; that is, deduct $125 from my commission.

Even Lee noticed that I had a cold and advised me to go home. While on the trolley I figured up my commission for the month, and found it was $1087.50. Deducting the $125 I had to lose and the $100 I should have received for salary for the month, I had $862.50 coming to me. Believe me, some bunch of commission!

I think Francis was as delighted as I was over my big streak of luck.

"What are you going to do with it all, Peter?" he asked.

"First of all, I'm going to have one grand, good time; then I'm going to tell Lee where he fits."

"Go lightly," he said.

"Lightly? I tell you, Francis, if it hadn't been that I was landed in the job, I wouldn't have stayed there twenty-four hours. I sure made a mess of it when I left the Magnitude. Just because I had a bit of luck I'm not going to stay with Lee. I tell you, Francis, I wouldn't stay there for any money he could give me."

He came across the room, put his arm over my shoulder and said, "Peter, old chap, I don't know when you have said anything that has made me as proud of you as that. I think you have learned the first real lesson in making good in business, and that is that success is not measured by the dollar mark, but by the yardstick of happiness." The only real success comes from giving other people an equivalent for what they give you, so that you and I are satisfied. It doesn't make any difference whether you are selling goods, working as a bookkeeper or hiring help—unless there is a fair exchange, there is something wrong somewhere."

ARMORY COMPLETION PLANNED

Cavalry Headquarters Here Among Buildings Halted by War

Completion of the armories begun in the State in this city and Tyrone, Pa., for cavalry organizations and at Pottstown and Reading for the infantry will probably be authorized by the State Armory Board at a meeting to be called for Harrisburg early in December. The question of construction was held in abeyance during the war because of the requirements of materials, but since the signing of the armistice the matter has been taken up with Federal authorities.

The State has maintained all the armories since the National Guard units were mustered into the Federal service and a number of them have been used for training corps. All were in service for hospitals during the influenza epidemic.

COAL

How Kunkel's is Meeting the Situation

In these times of limited allotment of coal, when it is necessary for the Federal Fuel Administration to prescribe the general method of distribution, the coal dealer may do much to relieve the anxiety and forestall the inconvenience of the householder with respect to the home supply.

It has been our constant endeavor to maintain efficient service toward our customers, even though it has been against heavy odds much of the time.

We are glad to be in a position to say that the Kunkel organization has never refused an order for coal where it had to be carried in—and we have carried it in. Likewise we have never refused an order from any one within our delivery zone. And on November 1st there was not a single customer who had placed an order with us who hadn't some coal in his cellar.

Furthermore, we can say with confidence that, although it may be necessary to ask customers to change sizes ordered in some cases, we will deliver 100 per cent of all tonnage ordered—provided they will take it as soon as we can deliver it. This is said in face of the fact that we have orders for thousands of tons on our books at present.

Whatever increased diligence and super-effort we have had to put forth in coping with labor-shortage and other abnormal conditions we consider well worth while, for our business is to serve our customers; and we have a pardonable pride in fulfilling our trust.

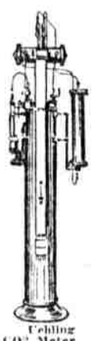
COAL AND THE CO_2 METER



Uehling CO_2 Meter

By reading the chart the average efficiency and economy of the boiler plant can be instantly determined. The per cent of CO_2—carbon dioxide—in the flue gas tells you whether or not the coal has been completely burned, and if you are wasting some valuable heat units up the stack.

We have prepared a small elementary pamphlet on the "Combustion of Coal" that we would like you to read.

A postal will bring it.
