OPINIONS DIFFER ON STOCKS' FALL

Some Blame It on Tight Money; Others See Pessimism as Cause

It was generally agreed in the financial district yesterday that the sharp decline in the prices of stocks was the result of money conditions. One well-known broker said there was no buying power, and every one wanted to sell. As a matter of fact there is a strong potential buying power, he said, but it cannot get the money accommodations. "Several clients left our board room today," he said, "who were willing to buy at today's quotations, but we were not in a position to extend the usual courtesies to them."

Asked if he could see any immediate change for present conditions he said, "possibly in six months."

"Of course I mean," he continued, "we will have better prices and reactions right along, but there is so much new construction and so many manufacturers who will need money right away that I don't look for much ease in the money market for quite a while."

Opposed to this opinion was the view of another well-known broker. "It's all nonsense," he said, "to blame money restrictions for the conditions of the security market today. Five different banks called us up today with offers of money to loan. It's the condition of the country. We're all drifting to Bolshevism with the exception of a few able men who will try to keep things right. The air is charged with unrest and pessimism. The condition of the stock market today reflects the disturbed, unsettled state of people's minds and not the state of the money market."

A prominent banker who is in close touch with what is generally known as the "big interests," said yesterday when speaking of Mr. McAdoo's resignation, that all the surmises and reports which he has seen do not touch the real cause according to his information. Later on it will be known, he said, that Mr. McAdoo's health is the prime consideration in the matter.

Who Will Direct Roads?

When railroad stocks began to decline yesterday morning soon after the opening of the stock exchange, conversation in the brokers' offices naturally turned to the resignation of Mr. McAdoo. A banker remarked in this connection that he did not think the pronounced weakening in rails was so much the result of Mr. McAdoo's resignation as the doubt and uncertainty over his probable successor, and he said he hoped President Wilson would appoint two men as successors, one as Secretary of the Treasury and one as director general of railroads.

The article published yesterday on the subject of Mr. McAdoo's resignation by the Providence Journal, giving as the reason, not the fact that the Secretary had found it impossible to live on his official salary, but his insistence that the railroads be returned to their owners at the earliest possible moment after the end of the war, in opposition to the views which, it is said, are held by the President, was generally accepted in the financial district, and many financiers said public ownership of the railroads would be the big issue between the two parties in the next presidential campaign. A majority said that in taking the stand which the Providence Journal attributed to Mr. McAdoo he would have the country behind him.

Not all, however, were of this opinion, and some brokers were surprised that the possibility of government ownership should have any but a bullish effect on railroad stocks.

One well-known banker, whose house is closely associated with large railroad interests, called attention to the report of a telegram having been sent to Mr. McAdoo by employes of roads operated out of St. Louis opposing his resignation and pledging him $2000 a month as a part of his salary.

"This," said the banker, "introduces a new element into the discussion, and we ask ourselves what stand is labor going to take in the matter if it is made a national issue?

"I have no doubt that labor will be in favor of Government ownership, but evidently from this telegram, labor believes Mr. McAdoo is also in favor of it, and the question now is, Who is right: The Providence Journal or labor?"

This banker said he had no doubt of the result if the question is made an issue. He remarked: "The people are opposed to Government ownership."

Port of Philadelphia

SHIPPING NOTES

The steamer Bramwell Point passed Breakwater at 9:45 this morning.

The schooner Comano, which left Puget Sound en route for Port Elisabeth, South Africa, has not been reported for 107 days. She is considered much overdue and fears for the safety of the ship and her crew are entertained in western shipping circles.

The schooner Carrie W. Babson, bound from Ruatan to Tampico, sprang a leak during a blow off the Central American coast and was forced to return to port.

A dangerous obstruction, believed to be a submerged barge, is reported midway between Hoff Island and the main piers at South Beach.

Fourteen men of the steamer Damura, which was struck by lightning off Guam, are reported to have landed on the east coast of the Philippines. The dispatch states that all members of the crew have been accounted for, but this does not conform with a previous report that the crew comprised forty-six men, eighteen of whom were reported safe in San Francisco. This leaves four men still to be accounted for if the first report is correct.

The schooner Fred W. Thurlow, bound for Boston from Rio de Janeiro, with a cargo of guano, had to put back to port after having lost her sails and suffered much damage in a recent storm. This is the third schooner that has attempted a trip from that port recently compelled to return.

The tanker Gulfoil, from this port, the steamer Sabin Sun and the steamer John D. Rockefeller, all bound south, were reported as having passed Jupiter.

A wireless dispatch brings the news that the Italian steamer San Gennaro, from Genoa to New York, was signaled and is approaching the American coast. She will probably dock tomorrow.

The tug W. B. Kenne, towing a barge, passed east of City Island.

The bark Bolsen, a Norwegian craft, bound for Baltimore, passed in Cape Henry last night.

BUSINESS CAREER OF PETER FLINT

A Story of Salesmanship by Harold Whitehead

(Copyright)

CCLIV

BRIGHT and early this morning I beat it to the Magnitude offices.

Old Mr Samper nudged Mrs. Samper and said in fun, "Peter Flint is bound for a wedding by the appearance of the glad attire."

"I wish you were half as particular as he is," she reproved.

"Humph, it's only since he got back from Farmdale," was his defense, and then, with a twinkle in his eye he asked, "Got a girl up in the old home town, Peter Flint?"

They tried a bit longer to get my goat. I think a fellow should take pains with his get-up.

Perkins told me that they had just had the biggest quarter's business in the history of the company.

"Things are certainly humming," he continued, "and our fellows are making more money than ever. It's too bad you left us, Flint, for you sure had the makings of a top-notch insurance agent. You could have gone a long way with the company. By the way, I hear you've been sick."

I told him all about it. "But I'm in fighting trim again now, though, and ready to eat 'em alive."

"I understand that the real estate market is rather dull just now, Flint. How about it?" Perkins and I looked up to see who spoke. It was "C. C." and we shook hands heartily. I like "C. C." He's always the same.

"I don't know for sure," was my reply, "for I've been ill with pneumonia for three months and only got back to New York last night."

"Going to work for the same people?" he asked.

"No; Lee and I couldn't agree. He was too tricky for me. I made more than a thousand dollars in the month I was with him," I boasted.

"You'd better come back to us, Flint," "C. C." said as he put on his hat and left the office.

"If you thought of seeing Mr. Goldman about——" that's as far as Perkins got, for the door swung sharply open and in Goldman came.

He gave me a sharp look between narrowed lids and then shook hands and went to pass on to his private office.

"Mr. Goldman," I called out, "can you spare me a few minutes?"

A sharp glance at me and Perkins and then he said, "Why, yes, I guess so—come along in."

When we were settled in his office he asked, "Well, Flint, how are things going in the—let's see—real estate, isn't it?" I nodded. "And what can I do for you?"

"I want to come back and work for you, Mr. Goldman," I blurted out.

"So. What's the trouble with your last job?"

"Mr. Lee and I couldn't agree—he was tricky." My explanations seemed very lame somehow.

"You left us because we couldn't agree," he said coldly.

"That was very different," I went on. "You treated me white, but Lee—he—he——" My voice trailed into nothingness.

"I see," broke in Goldman. "You are a good salesman, Flint, but there's no job for you here."

"Why not? I don't want any drawing account. I've plenty of money. I made over a thousand dollars the month I sold real estate. Surely you can't refuse business if I get it?"

Goldman straightened up in his chair and said, "If you remember, Flint, I told you before you left that we never take back any one who leaves. It's bad for the organization if people think they can come and go as they please. I'm sorry, but there's no place for you with us."
