And to be sure that no youngster will be forgotten. Miss Ruth Plumly Thompson, stanch friend of all the boys and girls, will add Kriss Kringle, at Ledger Central, Chestnut east of Broad, This will be the headquarters of the venerable Santa, and Miss Thompson, and it will open Monday. From there hundreds and hundreds of gifts will be distributed to poor children in all sections of Philadelphia Those who have reaped a good harves during the present prosperity should bear in mind that there are many poor children in this city who have lost their daddles in the great war.

The shadow of poverty hovers over the homes of many of them, and those who desire to give these children real sunshine on Christmas morn can do so leaving their gifts with Santa Claus of the Ledgers. In the playrooms of many Philadel phia homes there are no end of aban-doned toys. They would bring cheer to hundreds of poor children on Christnas morn. Bundle these playthings and

CHAPTER XVI

MANY times before the studio dinner Ruth gave more than a passing thought to it. Gene Mathews had said that he would ask some of the old crowd to meet Scott and herself. What would those people be like? She hesitated to ask Scott, because after their conversation she had no wish to appear curious. She wanted to give Scott the impression that she took things as a matter of course.

The evening of the affair she pondered.

"It that you, Scotty?"

The evening of the affair she pondered very carefully as to what she would wear. Ought it to be something simple, or something rather dressay? Would these women be attired unconventionally, as women be attired unconventionally, as she had read they would, in loose clinging gowns, or what? She hated to appear too smug and conventional and yet she had a womanish desire to put every one in the shade as far as dress was con-cerned. When she was finally dressed she wore a simple little semievening frock of black charmeuse and net. It had a round neck and long sheer sleeves and was extremely becoming. "How are you going to dress?" she had asked Scott.

"I'm not going to dress at all. I'll meet you downtown. It would be slily to come home. This long trip for nothing doesn't appeal to me."

Ruth knew that he was quite right, but she felt vaguely hurt just the same. He might have said that he would like to come up for her so that she could refuse magnanimously to allow such a thing. But then, she reflected, he probably hadn't thought of such a thing. It was early in the evening and there was no reason why it would not be perfectly proper for her to go downtown alone.

Scott met her at the Fourteenth street subway station and they walked over to the studio from there. Ruth was beginning to be somewhat excited over the entire thing. She even warmed up to the extent of asking Scott just before they reached there if he thought they would like her.

He laughed. "Of course, if you like hem," he said somewhat enign "What do you mean, dear?"

"Don't act as though you thought they were queer beings from another world. Be one of them."

A damper fell on Ruth's feelings. She wished vaguely that Scott hadn't said

"It that you, Scotty?"
"Hello, Bet." Scott called merrily, " didn't know you were to be here. "You know you couldn't have a celebration without me," returned the girl laughingly, "How are you, Mrs. Scott," and Ruth recognized suddenly the girl they had met on her wedding

In spite of herself Ruth's manner was reserved in responding, but the girl did not seem to notice. The next minute Gene appeared and then they were in the studio, which in spite of herself Ruth and to admit was charming.

It was a huge room, so large that there were shadows everywhere. They sprawled in the corners and made the sprawled in the corners and made the room look larger than it really was, and a soft light from outside came through the huge skylight that extended across the entire front of the room. There was a fireplace with a gay little fire burning on the hearth, and candles were lighted Ruth was introduced here and there to people. In all there were about ten of them, too many for her to take in all at once. She did notice Betty, however, and thought her more than attractive. In the dim light she looked beautifully dressed, but when she came close to Ruth, Ruth saw that her dress was really quite shaby, though attractive. Ruth, Ruth saw that her dress was really quite shabby, though attractive and effective because of its bright coloring. Most of the women were dressed in shirtwaists and skirts, but there was one dark woman with short hair that stood out all around her head, who wore a blue trailing gown that close by Ruth saw was made of the cheapest material. She smoked eigarettes constantly.

Ruth had time to notice the studio, o, and saw that in spite of its firetoo, and saw that in spite of its fre-place, it was dirty and had many draw-backs. The woodwork was discolored, there were holes in the floor and every plece of furniture in it was old. Ruth preferred her own little place with its shining new furniture, its glistening woodwork, and its porcelain fixings, and yet here she realized that there was an artistic effect about this place that her own apartment lacked entirely.

most six years I suffered from a severe case of skin trouble which began with swelling and intense pain in my knee. Then my leg became inflamed and sores broke out, which itched and burned terribly day and night. I tried many remedies, but gained no relief. I even spent six months in the hospital, and the doctors wanted to amputate my leg. At last I tried Resinol Ointment and Resingl Soap and obtained relief from the first application.
