Katherine Register Is Married in Boston to Geraldyn Redmond.

Nancy Wynne Reads an Interesting Letter About

the Last Drive of the War

WELL, after several dates had been set and changed owing to the exigencies of war, Katherine Register was married yesterday up in Boston to Geraldyn Livyesterday up in Boston to Geraldyn Livingston Redmond, U. S. N. R. Flying Corps, The wedding was celebrated at Katherine's grandmother's home on Commonwealth avenue, and if you've ever been to Boston you know what a perfect avenue that is on which to live. Mr. and Mrs. Albert L. Register are Katherine's parents and they all formerly lived in Ardmore, you know, and are members of the Register family here. So naturally we are all interested in this wedding, especially Katherine's own friends, and they are many!

Barbara was one of her bridesmaids and Doris Taylor, of Springfield, Mass., was the other. One of the reasons for the postponement of the wedding was the fact that Captain Johnson Redmond, Gerald's brother, was to come home from overseas shortly and they wanted him for best man, so they waited and changed from November to December, and then they changed from December 11 to December 18. But he finally got there.

Katherine's paternal grandmother is Mrs. I. Layton Register, and she is a niece of Mrs. Matthew Baird, Jr., of Ardmore. Her maternal grandmother is Mrs. Elizabeth Simmons.

READ such an interesting letter from Jack Blynn, who was in the ambulance service in France during the war, that I begged permission to give you a few extracts. You know we are so apt to think of the risks the soldiers take as the only risks in the war; but, my goodness, what those ambulance men have gone through and what they have done for the wounded and dying is one of the most wonderful things of the great conflict. And they are so modest about it. This letter was written to a friend, and in it he asked that it should not be shown to his mother, Mrs. Harry Blynn, until after the war was over, as he knew she would be so worried about him. But now the war is over she has seen it, and I'm glad to be able to give you an extract or so. Indeed, if I were his mother I'd be proud to think I had such a son.

"It was bad enough," he says, "when we used to carry the wounded French, but when those poor things were our own Americans!"- (This letter was written just about a month before the armistice, when the Americans were forging ahead so fast that they covered the ground as signed for three days in one.) "By this time we were not using roads at all, but were running over hills through what must have been fields. 'Four other fellows and myself-five ambulances in all-loaded up with stretchers and stretcher-bearers and tried to establish a new advanced dressing station, but the Germans had the lead on the road for fair and dropped shells all around us. So the infantry lieutenants in charge ordered us to try a branch road. We got shelled out of that, too, and how the cars came through 1 could never tell you.

"The post was finally established right where a boche machine-gun squad had been blown up, and there all those Germans lay! Sundown brought us another horror-gas! 'Three of our men had to be sent to a hospital and J. G. and I were the whole attack was right here. Many of the wounded were hurt in the head and the bandares made it impossible to put

GOING TO AFRICA

RICH MISSIONARY

Dr. Theodore Pitcairn, Swedenborgian, Is Milliónaire in

Own Right

The Rev. Theodore Pitcairn, twenty-five years old, son of the late John Pitcairn, millonaire plate glass manufacturer, will sail for South Africa within a few weeks as a missionary of the Swendenborgian faith. This is the second time the Rev. Mr. Pit-cairn has secured his passport to go to Basutaland, the province in which he will work, the other time being in June, when he was prevented from sailing at the last min-ute because he had neglected to get the neces-sary missionary's permit from the British Government.

Government, Returning to Philadelphia, he, with the as-sistame of the Rev. H. R. Alden, another Swedenborgian minister, worked among the negroes of this city. So successful were they in their work, generally carried on through the medium of street-corner meetings, that the Rev. Carey M. Bird, pastor of the Mount Nobo Baptist Church, a negro congregation, invited both the ministers to speak at the church. Later a hall on South Broad street was fented as headquarters.

The work in this city was so interesting and the results so gratifying that the Rev. Mr. Pitcairn decided to stay here to help advance the faith. This week, while ill in bed, he received a letter from the chief of South African missions, telling of the work already accomplished there and the pos-sibilities of the new field. He decided to accept the call and immediately began making arrangements for an early departure. The Rev? Mr. Pitcairn is still confined to his home, at Bryn Athyn, but friends secured his passport. The missionary's permit is no longer a necessity, as it was a wartime measure of Great Britain to keep German measure of Great Britain to keep German sples from her colonies. The young minister is entimelastic about his proposed work and intends to leave for the missionary field immediately after the Christmas holidays. His work in South Africa will consist largely of instructing native ministers in the teaching and beliefs of Swedenborg, but he will also have an opportunity to try his powers in a virgin field.

The Philadelphia work will not lag in his absence, Doctor Allen having decided to connusence, Doctor Allén having decided to con-tinue it, in addition to caring for his West Philadelphia congregation. In the meantime, the Rev. Mr. Pitcairn, millionaire, in his own right and reared in luxury, will expond his belief.

Soldiers, sallors and marines from the Philadelphia Navy Yard attended the services.

Convinced They Can Work

"The first principle in this special type of alacement might be termed the education of the prospective worker. And that is as pay-chological as it is actual. The crippled man must be firmly convinced that he can work. In spite of the protests and incredulousness of his relatives and friends, he must be taught to accept the only modern and hopeful point of view, that he can again become a self-supporting member of his community Then, whenever the age and the general char-acter of the applicant permit, he must be taught in classes such as are provided by the Red Cross Institute a trade which will enable him to use most effectively his remaining faculties, "For the sake of both of these," says Miss Stein, "a conscientious effort is made not to send any man to fill a position unless careful investigation has demonstrated that he can do the work as well as a normal man. The employer is not asked to take the man out of charity.

Recognition Secured

"Trained assistants, efficient systems of card indexing, the requirements and the qual-ifications of positions and applicants, the su-pervision of an experienced, interested and rogressive manager-these assets have con ributed to the success of this placement laboratory. "The returned wounded soldier undoubtedly acted as a stimulant in securing recognition and co-operation from the employers. The in-telligent employer who has tested the ability of the disabled man to perform a task will realize that the industrial cripple, too, demands his attention. The Red Cross Institute employment bureau has had experience with both the disabled soldier and the industrial cripple.
