

WOUNDED, SORRY TO MISS FINISH

Private Dougherty Underwent Operation So He Could Fight

14 DEAD IN LIST TODAY

Seven Philadelphians Killed in Action, Two Are Dead of Wounds

Twice rejected by the army and navy when he sought to enlist, Private Edward Dougherty, wounded during the battle of the Meuse, underwent an operation so as to make sure that his draft board would pass him and give him a chance to get into what he called "the greatest game in the world."

Even while in the hospital, recovering from his wounds, his one thought was that he was missing the finish. "It's certainly tough luck to be out of the running," he wrote to his wife, who lives at 2439 North Great street. "But the other boys are treating 'em tough."

Private Dougherty went to Camp Lee, Va., on April 29, volunteered for immediate service overseas, and in less than six weeks was in France with Battery B, of the 31st Field Artillery.

Several Officers Listed

Several officers are named today, including Captain Joseph N. Barry, 34, wounded severely; Lieutenant William S. Vollmer, of Overbrook, and Lieutenant Joseph M. Murphy, of 1233 North Seventeenth street, also severely injured; Lieutenant Sydney Thayer, Jr., marine corps, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Thayer, of Thornburg, Haverford, and Lieutenant Joseph Taylor, Oak Lane, who were less seriously injured. Word of their fate was received through unofficial sources many weeks ago and published in the EVENING PUBLIC LEDGER. Their names appear on the official list for the first time today.

Lieutenant Philip M. Darby, son of J. Mortimer Darby, of Germantown, who is listed with the slightly wounded today, was injured for the second time on October 2, during the terrific battle of the Argonne forest. He was in temporary charge of his unit, Company I, 110th Infantry, when put out of the action by a machine-gun bullet. The injury was not very serious, and his father believes that the young officer has already rejoined his regiment.

Lieutenant Darby was first wounded in July at the start of the Franco-American offensive, but soon recovered and returned to the front. He was promoted from second to first lieutenant for gallantry and efficiency on the field of battle.

List Today Has 5784 Names

Another big casualty list is made public by the War Department today, the total for the country at large being 5784, including 660 Pennsylvanians. There are 158 soldiers from Philadelphia and vicinity on the honor roll, seven having been killed in action, two having died of wounds, four of disease, and one death is reported due to other causes.

SKETCHES OF THE HEROES

Private William Schett, 1604 West Berks street, was wounded October 5 by a piece of shrapnel in the left leg above the knee, according to recent letters received by his mother. He says that he underwent a successful operation and expects to be in tip-top shape again soon. He is a member of the 231st Field Artillery, going to France last May after training at Camp Meade and Gordon.

Corporal John F. Bowen, slightly wounded, says in a letter to his mother, Mrs. Mary Bowen, 208 East street, that he was gassed on October 5, but is recovering. He was drafted September, 1917, trained at Camp Meade and sailed for France in July.

Private Thomas F. Domick, Jr., of 45 Pleasant street, was wounded October 2, according to a War Department message dated December 11. He enlisted in April, 1917, in the Third Cavalry and trained at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., but was transferred to the heavy field artillery after he arrived in France during November of last year.

Private Arthur Murray, 3620 North Perry street, wounded September 2, made his home with a brother, James at 3529

North Perry street. No letters have been received from him since he is reported to have been wounded. He was drafted in July, 1918, and trained at Camp Meade a month before sailing for overseas.

Private Edward T. Branagan, Company D, 109th Infantry, and of 3410 North Fifth street, was reported in a telegram from the War Department to have been wounded July 15. His parents hardly know what to think for, they say, they have been hearing from their son regularly and he has not mentioned being wounded. Only yesterday a Christmas card arrived from him. He enlisted in March, 1917, and trained at Camp Hancock until his regiment left for overseas last April. He was born in this city and attended the public schools here. He is nineteen years old and a machinist. A brother, Charles, is with a unit of our army in England.

Private James Dally, Jr., reported as wounded in today's official casualty list, was attending the West Philadelphia High School when the United States entered the world war. He said something about enlisting, but his parents objected and urged him to finish his school course. He stood the strain until May, then announced one evening that he thought he would "go get a regular job." His parents protested, but finally consented. He started down town early the next day and nothing was heard from him for forty-eight hours. Then a telegram arrived from Fort Slocum, N. Y., stating he had secured that "regular job" in the regular army.

He went to France last spring as a member of Company M, Ninth Infantry, notification did not reach his parents who live at 420 South Sixty-second street, until last week and his name did not appear on Page Twenty-three, Col. Three

The Duo-Art Pianola-Piano
The Christmas Gift Supreme

This—the latest Aeolian creation—is the greatest musical instrument in the world.

Can you imagine a piano so built that Harold Bauer—or any artist—can sit down and play it and then leave the piano and listen to it as it repeats his previous effort?

The Duo-Art is such an instrument! It records as the artist plays, and then reproduces every note exactly with most accurate expression. It does this in your home.

It is also a perfect player-piano—you yourself can play any standard roll most expressively without pumping.

As to its merit as a piano—one need only mention the pianos in which the Duo-Art is built—the Steinway, Weber, Steck and Stroud—all on sale at Heppé's.

Call at Heppé's and hear your favorite pianist play any standard composition. Illustrated catalogues will be sent if you desire.
