hich both she and Alice would just a New Yorker." coincide, Scott's Bohemian friends. Alice would be likely to disapprove of them because they were not conventional just as Ruth did, but inasmuch as neither of the girls would ever be drawn any closer to each other by this slight bond it need hardly be mentioned. Alice Barry had been married two years, and she was two years older than Scott. She and Scott had never agreed on anything, therefore when she had is West with her husband Scott had some west with her husband scott had not regretted her departure. She was short and quite plump. She had sleek brown hair and brown eyes. Ruth thought her quite plain until she smiled and then there was something vastly sitractive about her. She had rather a meetic meant white so that full bares mouth with a rather full lower broad white teeth. She was not amartly dressed; in fact she looked dowdy, although everything she had on was of good material and she certainly was not shabby. She had her mother's tailored ideas without Mrs. Raymond's frills and accessories. Beside Alice, Buth looked almost luxprious. Her tawny hair was a that she ruffed, Mrs. Raymond insisted that she remove the small hat, and although she demurred she was finally forced to comply. Her hair was beautiful just as Scott loyed it, with a hundred high lights and warm shadows; but Ruth saw Alice look at it disapprovingly and Alice look at it disapprovingly and wished she had stopped to pin it tighter. Ruth's clothes were, of course, perfectly chosen, and her tall, slim young figure looked well in anything; therefore the little squirrel coatee over the simple blue serge dress with its round neck looked sumptuous beside the blue satin dress that Alice wore. Alice had obvi-ously taken a course in home dress, making and had made her own dress, while Ruth's clothes had been made by some one accustomed to cutting per-fect lines. Socit's greeting of Alice was care-

Scott's greeting of Alice was care-leasily bluff. Alice's sisterly kiss was received dutifully by Ruth, and the four ant down to talk and get acquainted. Mr. Raymond was not present and Ruth was sorry. She liked her tall rather quietly humorous father-in-law; liked him much better than Scott's mother, with whom she never felt at ease.

with whom she never felt at case. Both girls were instantly prejudiced against each other, for to do Mrs. Ray-mond credit she had told Alice nothing beforehand. But Alice with the envy in her heart that every girl feels in the presence of some one who is better dramsed and wears her clothes incom-arable better instantly decided that dressed and wears her clothes incom-parably better, instantly decided that Ruth was frivolous and too fond of in-consequential things. Ruth thought Allos dictatorial and prim. She reseated the proprietary way in which she treated Soott, too, and hoped they would not have to do too much for her in the way of entertaining.

Alice knew quite well what she was bout, however. She was not bowled per by Ruth's appearance; she was too tain of her own good points and she d the advantage of being in her other's home. It was Ruth who was mother's home. It was kuin who was be stranger here. "How's Herbert?" asked Soqit. "Oh, just splendid. And how's every-thing with you, Scott. I haven't seen you since you came back with all kinds of homora. How does it feel?" Allees toom was only jurtly gratified. Sie had no ides of saying enough to daughter-in-law. "Oh, I love New York, I always have, you know. I don't mind the life as Scott docs. He seems to resent the size of the rooms and the cramped way we live. I just don't think about it." "That's the' true New York spirit, isn't

It, Alice? "She hasn't been married long enough to worry about her husband," said Alice laughing. "I don't think I want to worry about "I don't think I want to morry about my husband," said Ruth, flushing at the imputed slight. "It rather admits of competition, and that is certain to be fatal.

fatal." "Well, of course, all of us haven't so much self-confidence," said Alice. "Oh, but I didn't mean that to sound conceited," Ruth hastened to say, "I conceited," Ruth hastened to say, "I meant it in a general way." "Well, I hope you and Scott will al-ways proceed in this way with your mar-ried life," said Alice, "You sound as though you and Bert had parted in a huff," said Scott, "Your ideas have become so embittered." It was Alice's turn to flush and, she did so. She hated criticism, But Scott was really angry now. He considered that Alice had made no effort to meet Ruth halfway. "You used to badger him before you were married,' he went on, "and, from what you say, you haven't changed for the better." There was a slience and Ruth mentally There was a silence and Ruth mentally rejoiced. Scott had come to her rescue : but she was certain now that she would hate this sister of his.

(A few sidelights on Alice's char-cter are discussed in Thursday's chapter of this story.)

These are in the most fashionable colorings and in many styles; they have collars of nutria or sealene. and one style in silvertone has no fur. All are lined with striped or plain silk.

Two styles at this price are sketched. One is of velour with a generous cape collar of sealene. It is lined throughout with plain or striped silk, the buttonholes are all hand-piped and the coat would regularly be marked twice this sum. $25

The other is also of velour with a shawl collar of nutria or sealene; it is fully lined with striped silk. In taupe, burgundy, green and brown. You can remove this collar in the spring and have a spring coat. $25.

At $35

Velour Pompom Silvertone

Beautifully tailored coats, lined throughout with plain or striped silk. Some are samples, individual in style. Two coats of which we have sizes are aketched.

One coat is designed especially for young women. It is of green, brown or taupe velour, lined with silk, and topped with a shawl collar of sealene. $85. The other is also of velour in burgundy, taupe and brown with an extra large shawl collar of soft, full-furred raccoon. $35.

PLEASE NOTE that these are not $25 or $35 coats in anything but price. They are such coats as you would expect to pay twice as much for, in many instances.
