

brother is stationed at Jersey City, attached to a hospital train.

Corporal Benedict Conroy had his left leg badly shattered on the morning of November 11, only ten hours before the armistice was signed.

Private Joseph Greib, killed in action, enlisted in Company A, 110th Infantry, in July of last year, when only nineteen years old.

Private John J. McGeehan, Second Division, French Mortar Batteries, was reported killed in action in August, but his younger brother, James J. McGeehan, Jr., of Hog Island, received a letter dated December 3, in which he said he was in a base hospital and was about to be discharged.

Private Edward F. Herman, Company D, 315th Infantry, was wounded on August 12, but his parents have since received three telegrams notifying them he had been wounded on November 3.

Private Charles H. Fisher, Company B, 314th Infantry, was wounded on October 21. He is twenty-four years old and before being drafted worked in the foundry of the Reading and Pottsville Railroad.

Sergeant Joseph Haines, headquarters company, 315th Infantry, was killed on October 21. He was twenty-five years old and before being drafted worked in the foundry of the Reading and Pottsville Railroad.

Sergeant Charles Macken, thirty-two years old, for ten years a member of the regular army and a hero of three wars, died of wounds received in action in a hospital in Paris on December 17.

Macken served three years in the Philippine Islands, two years in China and later on the Mexican border. When this country declared war on Germany he promptly re-enlisted, was actually in Camp Greene and assigned to Company G, Forty-seventh Infantry.

Private Leonard Miller, Company H, 199th Infantry, enlisted in November, 1917. He received his training at Camp Hancock, Augusta, Ga. On September 6 he was wounded in action, at the foot of his sister, Mrs. Silva Campellone, 3405 North Eleventh street, that he was rapidly recovering and hoped soon to be home.

a member of the Stonemen's unit. On arriving at the front the French authorities appointed for some ambulance men, so many of their own units having been wiped out during the big German offensive in the spring. McCauley and a number of other American boys were transferred to the French service and have been at the front ever since.

The official notification of the young man's injury was not received by his mother, Mrs. Lulu P. McCauley, until last week, though he was hurt on November 13, but a letter from James H. Nicely, of 5220 Wayne avenue, Germantown, mechanic to young McCauley, who was an ambulance driver, gave her the facts.

Private Charles F. Hinger, died from wounds received in action, was twenty-six years old and son of Mr. and Mrs. George Hinger, 2609 West Gordon street, Philadelphia. He was a member of Company P, 142nd Infantry, and trained at Sea Girt. According to the telegram received from the War Department a week ago, the young soldier passed away on November 30.

The last letter received from him, dated October 16, stated that he had been in a fierce battle for six nights and five days and had come through without a scratch. Prior to being called to the colors, the young soldier was employed as a draftsman.

Military Policeman Charles H. Rothman died of disease, was buried November 11 from the home of his sister, Mrs. Bella Shockett, 1830 Sedgley avenue, with whom he formerly lived. Rothman was taken to a sanatorium in southern France, after having been badly gassed.
