Beautiful Women in Beautiful Gowns and Jewels Welcomed the Return of Opera Last Night—Mrs. Livingston Biddle Recovered From Illness

After a cessation of opera for three weeks every one turned out in wonderful new gowns and looked perfectly smart. Frances Gilmore had a box party of interesting looking women—Phoebe Harding, who is rather fair, and Agnes Lewis. Mrs. Moore's cousin, and Ethel Wigram. It always seems strange to see her in evening clothes, she is such a typical sports-suit girl. But, bless you, she looks simply stunning in evening frocks, and she lived up to her reputation for looks last night. Agnes is always good-looking. She has such pretty eyes and is always well-dressed. She's engaged to Fielding Wilcox, you know, a brother of the Mark Wilcox who married Margaret Keating, and of Marjory Wilcox, who is engaged to Alberto Santa Maria.

Patty Borio was in the Clem Newbold's box with Mary Newbold and Miss Robertson. Patty and Mary are first cousins, you know. Patty's mother was Miss Nannie Newbold, a sister of Clement, Arthur and John Newbold.

Mrs. Alexander Williams Biddle entertained in the Stotesbury box and had Louise Brooks, Mrs. Stotesbury's daughter, with her. Mrs. Biddle is a stunning looking woman. She had also Mrs. Barclay Warburton as a guest. In fact, every one was there. It was a most brilliant night.

The Junior McCall, after a two weeks' holiday, is going to start work again on Friday at the home of Genevieve Dillenbeck, 123 Uppal street, Germantown. Mrs. D. C. Lippincott, of Lincoln drive, Germantown, Joan Lippincott's mother, has donated the prettiest pink-and-white checked gingham for the girls to make up into summer dresses for the French children. They sent over a large shipment of clothes before Christmas, you know, and also gave $10 toward the cocoa fund that Mrs. Kelly, vice president of the mission, has started. You know the French children hadn't had any cocoa since before the war, and the first time they were given some they "fell on it with a low growl," so to speak, and loved it so that they tried to make it last as long as possible.

And another thing that's being done to help along this work: One of the members has a Sunday school class—perhaps several of them have—but this one also has a practical turn of mind, and she's going to put her Sunday school class to work knitting sweaters. And the sweaters are to be sent to the McCall as a part of their next shipment of clothes for French refugees.

AREN'T you glad to hear that Mrs. A. Livingston Ludlow Biddle is better? She has had such a long illness. You know she was at the hospital with influenza during the very first outbreak of the epidemic. Then she went home and was quite ill for a long time, and it has only been since New Year's Day that she has been able to be up and around as usual. As she is better, Liv has gone off on a shooting trip this week. Mrs. Biddle was Eugenia Law, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Law.

THERE'S to be a most interesting lecture out at Manheim tonight by Mr. Theodore Justice, on the "Evolution of the Horse." It's a very instructive lecture, covering a period of more than four million years, beginning with the little four-toed Eohippus of the Eocene Epoch, when cats were larger than horses. Wouldn't it be great if things were like that nowadays, and the pet of the house suddenly leaped up in your window in the small hours and playfully leaped over on your neck? The lecture is under the auspices of the French Wounded Fund, and National League girls will take up a collection for French Orphans. There's to be music, too, but I can't tell you what kind, because that's to be a surprise. Some of the people on the committee are Mrs. Robert Newhall, Mrs. George Newhall, Mrs. Tolbert Richardson, Mrs. Laurence Mellor, Mrs. William B. Curtis, Mrs. William Fries Newhall, Mrs. William P. Barba, Mrs. Nicholas Petry and Miss Emily Tattersfeld.

I AM so glad for Emile Williams Hopkins's sake to hear that Johns Hopkins has been mustered out and is home again. I wonder when Bill Hopkins will come home? He was with the Hancock men over in France. You know their mother, Mrs. Johns Hopkins, died since Bill went overseas. He is engaged to Christine Stockton and I suppose will be married very soon after he returns to this country. Christine is a sister of Mrs. Linn Taylor, who was married to Mrs. Johns Hopkins who was married to Emile Williams about a year ago. I can't quite keep track of the time all these marriages took place, can you? I know there was one on August 11, 1917, and another on August 18 that same year, and still another on September 27, and so on, but it's hard to keep track of who was when. NANCY WYNNE.

Social Activities
Miss Lorraine Goodrich Graham, whose engagement to Mr. Edward A. Bacon was recently announced, will be guest of honor at a luncheon given by Mrs. Graham Dougherty on January 22, at her home, 1514 Spruce street. Mrs. Dougherty was Miss Maria Fraser.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Donner entertained at dinner last night before the opera. Their guests were Mr. and Mrs. Sidney K. Keith, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles James Tower.

Mr. and Mrs. William Strathmore entertained Mrs. Radcliffe Chester, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. George Eustis Paine, of New York, in their box at the opera last evening.

Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Ellison and Miss Edith A. Ellison, of Briar Hill, Rosemont, will leave tomorrow for New York, where they will spend a few days. They will go South on February 1.

Dr. and Mrs. Samuel McClintock Hamill, of 1823 Spruce street, entertained at a family dinner on Sunday.

Mrs. Mary Clay Ewart gave a tea at her studio on Monday. Mrs. Howard Kennedy presided at the tea table.

Skaters Need Shelter

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—We know that you consider the general welfare of the people and thought that you might help to secure a shelter at Hunting Park for the skaters this winter.

The other large cities have them, and it does seem as though Philadelphia could well afford to do likewise. There is no healthier sport than ice skating, particularly in the open, but there should be some comfort provided for the skaters, and a place to change one's skates and to change one's shoes, as well as to warm up a bit, would be met with the hearty approval of the majority of skaters. L. F. H. Philadelphia, January 6.

The Roman Republic

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—May I be permitted to suggest that in your editorial headed "Wilson, in the Forum, Ties the Strands of Liberty," there is an entire misconception of the spirit which animates this great Republic of the New World? You say, Sir, that "very modes of thought in which the founders of the United States gave expression to their purposes were grounded in Roman republicanism as it endured for seven centuries." To that statement I cannot agree. The Roman Republic was pagan. Its gods were pagan gods. Its modes of thought were heathenish. Its idea of liberty extended no further than to citizens of Rome. All others were slaves or tribute-payers to the republic. In what are called its days of grandeur, the Roman Republic was the exponent of militarism and the despotic rule of a conquering and conquering peoples of Europe, Africa and Asia Minor. Its guiding principle—lust for power, of covetousness, of wealth, of power. And when it met its death it became concentrated in the breast of one strong man he led his legions against the republic itself. When Caesar crossed the Rubicon, he sounded the knell of the Roman Republic. He was the flower of its modes of thought and the end of the republic was the natural and logical consequence of these modes of thought. For the Roman Republic lived by the sword and it met its death by the sword.

But this great American Republic was not conceived in, nor were its purposes expressed in the modes of thought of Roman republicanism. The founders of the United States of America looked not to Rome, but to God, as the source of their rights and their liberties. Where in Roman republicanism is to be found the thought, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness?" You will search vainly in vain for that great thought. Roman republicanism had no conception of it. Yet it is upon that great thought and that other equally American thought, "that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," that this Republic of ours is grounded. In spirit those thoughts are as far above the modes of thought of Roman republicanism as Christ is above Janus; as God is above Mars. The Roman Republic knew nothing of the great divine truths and principles of justice contained in the "Declaration of Independence," which is grounded upon those truths and principles.

President Wilson, therefore, does not go to Rome to link up the great republic of the New World with the great republic of the Old World. He goes to Rome to find a wholly unknown to the Roman Republic. It is the spirit which peacefully triumphed over the empire of Rome; the spirit which brought the great American Republic; the spirit of Him who taught the nations of peace and who gave His life for the whole world on Calvary's Mount. That spirit, coming from Jerusalem, conquering the Roman Empire, crossing the sea to America, is now carried back to Rome by the President of the American Republic that it may conquer the whole world. This, I am glad to believe, is the official "Y" and significance of Mr. Wilson's visit to Rome. It is not from the Italians as heirs of pagan Rome that he can hope for the acceptance of his policy. It is from the American people as heirs of Christian Rome that he must make his appeal. It is to the spirit of the Forum, but to the spirit of the Cathedral, that the spirit of America speaks through its chief executive. We stand in the presence of this spirit that God reigns and rules over the world which He made and that He is working out His will among the nations of the earth. H. B. Philadelphia, January 3, 1919.

(Imperfect and narrow though it was in many ways, the Roman Republic, up to the time of the dictatorship of Caesar, stood for a moderate and just government, whose traditions have given a thread of continuity to history. It was this link to which reference was made in the editorial, "How Do We Tie the Strands of Liberty?" readily seen in the application of the word Senate to describe the upper house of the American Congress. Disparities between French and American republics are obvious, and the way in which their traditions have been exemplified many times in world annals. The Declaration of Independence proclaimed that all men are created equal and with equal rights and equal duties. The adoption of the American Constitution universal manhood suffrage was unknown in the United States. Nevertheless the salutary influence of that statement, set down in all sincerity is incontestable.—Editor.)

Narberth Was Cold

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—Let me point out that in your issue of Saturday the 6th, under the heading, "Cheating Hill Winner in Temperature Race," the report of the Narberth weather bureau was not correct. The true temperature as shown by standard Weather Bureau instruments correctly exposed was 15 degrees. Your incorrect report of 20 degrees is a gross error. "In the usual way," which will not register the temperature of the free air and which is invariably several degrees too high. C. D. Narberth, January 6.

Praises Ledger Editorial

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—I have read all the editorials on Theodore Roosevelt available from the New York Tribune to the Philadelphia Record; and the one appearing in the EVENING PUBLIC LEDGER of yesterday, "Roosevelt's Movement of Inspiring Idealism," strikes me as being the fairest and the best. Every utterance in it is true, and there was no paragraph which appealed to me more strongly. It was: "Those who have criticized Colonel Roosevelt for his restless war of words in the present Administration have, in fact, missed the point of view of one of the ablest and most noble of our statesmen. He is not engaged in a mere war of words, but in a war of ideas, in a war of the spirit, in a war of the soul, in a war of the conscience of American public life."

It was one of the greatest tragedies of American public life and a cruel blow to a good man fitted for military service that Colonel Roosevelt was not permitted to take part in the great war which he had so much at heart. I would hazard a guess that the same hand that wrote "The Lessons of Victory" some weeks ago wrote the one yesterday. Very truly yours, H. H. GILKESON, Phoenixville, Pa., January 7.

Atlantic City Jeweler Dies

Atlantic City, Jan. 8.—Henry N. Bolte, one of the first jewelers in the city, died yesterday following an operation. He was sixty-four years of age and had been in the city many months. Mr. Bolte served as a member of City Council and of the city board of tax assessors. He was a member of the Masonic lodge and of the Elks club. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Frederick Rich, survives him.

Mrs. Marie L. Welhofer Dies at Shore

MASONS IN Y. M. C. A. FORM THEIR OWN CLUB

Overseas Workers With Troops Will Have Permanent Trowel-and-Triangle Organization
United by three bonds—American citizenship, membership in the Masonic fraternity and service in the Y. M. C. A. overseas organization—8000 "Y" workers have joined the T and T club, a recently formed organization. These letters, it should be explained, stand for trowel and triangle, emblems of Masonry, and the end of the republic was the natural and logical consequence of these modes of thought. For the Roman Republic lived by the sword and it met its death by the sword.

"AIDA" BRILLIANTLY SUNG BY METROPOLITAN

Well-Balanced Cast Gives Splendid Performance of the Verdi Masterpiece

Opera by Giuseppe Verdi
Aida.....Claudia Muzio
Amneris.....Louise Homer
Radames.....Gustavo De Luca
The High Priest.....Henri Scott
The King.....Giuseppe De Luca
Amunarro.....Gustavo De Luca
Menaszo.....Gustavo De Luca
A Priestess.....Lena Sparaco
Conductor—Roberto Moranzoni

That forty-seven years in a mere bagatelle in the life of an opera was proved by the large and enthusiastic crowd that greeted "Aida" at the Metropolitan Opera House last evening. Perhaps the outstanding feature of the performance was the perfect balance of the cast, so perfect, in fact, that it is difficult to say exactly to whom the greatest honors of the performance are due. Naturally Muzio as Aida, Homer as Amneris and Scott as Radames had the leading roles, but Henri Scott as the high priest, De Luca as Amunarro and Rossi as the king played and sang their parts with a sincerity and conviction that made by no means overlooked in the total results of the work. The inclination to over-sing and over-act these somewhat lesser parts in the opera, due to its intense emotional character, is not to be resisted, but at last evening's performance these parts were, without exception, held to their proper place in the work as a whole, with the result that the artistic balance was perfectly maintained throughout.

Claudia Muzio as Aida and Louise Homer as Amneris were little short of perfect in their respective parts, both vocally and histrionically. Both showed vocalization of the highest order, especially in power and voice control. Muzio sang with perhaps at her best in her scene in the first act, Ritorna incitor, the passionate declamation of which was truly done, as was also the flowing cantabile in the second act, "Nu Mi Pieta," which closes the number. The pathos of both voice and action at the end of this scene has never been surpassed in this city. Of equal merit in both respects was her romanza, "O Chio di Azzurro," the third act.

Mme. Homer rose to her greatest heights in the despairing song, "Ohime, Morir Mi Sento," at the close of the first scene of the second act, and in the scene which follows, any one or two scenes from a part so beautifully sung and sincerely acted as was her Amneris last evening.

Nor should the stage presence of both Muzio and Homer be forgotten. The former presented a beautiful delineation of the passionate, wild-spirited Ethiopian slave girl, while Mme. Homer was equally convincing as the first jealous, then vindictive and then repentant Egyptian princess.

Of the male parts, of course, the principal one was that of Radames, excellently sung and acted by Scott. He has the great advantage of having not only the voice but also the youthful and slender personal appearance for the part. His principal song was the romanza, "Celeste Aida." In the first act, which was delivered with fine vocal effect and conviction, and he sustained the part in the many duets in that and the following acts with sincerity and effective vocal and dramatic art.

PHILADELPHIA ARTIST ESCAPED FROM ENEMY

W. H. Gunnis, Gassed, Went 200 Miles on Bit of Army Bread

William H. Gunnis, once a Philadelphia artist, now a corporal in the 108th Field Artillery, writes home a thrilling story of his capture by the Germans, and his escape back to the American lines.

He got away during the great German retreat before the advancing troops of America and her Allies. He made two attempts to escape, but both times was brought back before he finally gave his captors the slip. He rejoined the American forces after traveling a distance of 200 miles in three days, on one-third of a loaf of German army bread.

At present Corporal Gunnis is in a hospital, recovering from the effects of gas received last September. Letters to his wife told her he went through pneumonia which developed both times he was in the enemy's hands and when he was convalesced had to go to another hospital for special after-gas treatment.

He was gassed some time before the Germans captured him, but did not write his wife about it until recently. He said that for a month after being gassed his eyes were crossed from the poison and he was subjected to constant medical attention.

Corporal Gunnis enlisted in June, 1917. He went to France as a member of the Headquarters Company of the 108th Field Artillery, after training for nine months at Camp Hancock. His home in this city was at the time of his enlistment at 5124 Funston street.

A few days before he sailed for France Corporal Gunnis married Miss Elizabeth Middleton, 1524 Cambridge street. The soldier was reported missing in action October 3 by the War Department. He writes, under date of October 12:

"This is the first night I have spent in the American lines since October 1, and you will never know just how happy I am, both because the war is over and because I am no longer a prisoner. I was on duty on the Argonne front when the Americans were making that big drive, with another lad by the name of Blair Heenan from my company. While up on the front we ran into a German machine-gun nest. In that position was an American tank that had been captured by the Germans. We took up a stand here, and fought until we ran out of shells, and then started to take to the tall timbers, but discovered to our sorrow that there were hundreds of the Hunns there, and that we were caught as prisoners of war."

"They demanded that we surrender, and things looked pretty bad for us. We were searched for papers and souvenirs, and then they mean time of it for a few minutes and then they sent us behind the lines."
