RETURNED TO DUTY (PREVIOUSLY REPORTED MISSING)

EDWARD M. REESE, 1645 West Huntingdon St. SYLVESTER B. DUBB, 2339 N. 15th St.

Lieutenant William Earl Stephens, a gallant member of Company G, 109th Infantry, of the famous Iron Division, passed unscathed through the great battle of the Marne, Chateau-Thierry, Vesle and Sedan, only to fall a victim to disease. On Thanksgiving Day, when his country gave thanks for the victory over the German hordes toward which he had richly contributed, Lieutenant Stephens succumbed to pneumonia.

Resigning a first lieutenant in the signal corps in August, 1917, because he wanted to get to France quickly, Lieutenant Stephens enlisted in Company G, 109th Infantry, formerly the First Regiment, N. G. P., and was sent to Camp Hancock, Ga., in November of 1917. He was promoted to sergeant, and assigned to headquarters company. In April, 1918, he was sent to France with a special liaison detail. In France his expert knowledge of telephones gained in Philadelphia with the Keystone Telephone Company, of which he was a former manager until he enlisted, made him a valuable man in the liaison service. He was sent to the American school for the officers in France, commissioned a second lieutenant in September, 1918, and assigned to duty as liaison officer of his regiment.

Lieutenant Stephens formerly lived with his family at 13 North Sixty-second street. He has a sister, Mrs. E. J. Winters, who lives at 19 Lakeside avenue, Oaklyn, N. J. Arthur Purcell, 803 West End Trust Building, a close personal friend of Lieutenant Stephens, received a card from him written November 24, from Luxembourg, on his way to Coblenz with the American army of occupation.

There is another small honor roll today, the total for the country at large being 846, including 108 Pennsylvanians. For this city the list numbers but twenty-seven, four killed in action, one having died of wounds and three of disease. Eight previously reported missing are now reported wounded, three are listed as wounded severely and two as slightly injured, two are missing and the same number, previously reported missing, are now said to have rejoined their regiments.

Included in a long list of American soldiers who have been released from German prison camps and have rejoined their regiments are the names of sixty-nine Pennsylvanians, of whom sixteen are from this city or vicinity. This list was made public by the War Department today.

The Philadelphians named are: Andrew Koch, 649 North Woodland street; Sergeant Bruce Williams, 1619 Belfield avenue; Ralph Jenkins, 219 Monroe street; Corporal Frank E. Kelly, 13 South Twenty-seventh street; Arthur Liberson, 712 Clymer street; Sabatino Lizzal, 915 Federal street; Louis Losasso, 345 North Sixty-fourth street; Bert E. O'Connell, 3007 Poplar street; William J. Stemmer, 2215 Sepivva

PROUD OF INDIANA'S RECORD

Governor Goodrich Discusses After-War Problems

Indianapolis, Jan. 9.—(By A. P.)—Praising Indiana's war record and calling attention to after-the-war reconstruction problems, Governor James P. Goodrich today outlined his legislative program before a joint session of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Indiana's quota of volunteers for the regular army was placed at 5400 but the State gave to the service 25,148 volunteers. In all branches of the service Indiana furnished approximately 130,000.

Governor Goodrich emphasized the importance of solving reconstruction problems. Indiana has stood foremost in every war activity, he said. "Never have we had more cause to be proud of the State," the Governor asserted. "Indiana's quota of volunteers for the regular army was placed at 5400 but the State gave to the service 25,148 volunteers. In all branches of the service Indiana furnished approximately 130,000."

Private John McLaughlin, 216 1/2 Infantry, to get back to the United States. The company was moved at a telegram received a week ago from the War Department. Private Stanley died on Oct. 2.

Private Louis E. Trapp, 318th Infantry, was reported missing by the War Department ten days ago, he reported from wounds received on September 28 at the great battle of the Meuse. He is so much improved, he said in his letter to his parents, who live at 4194 Richmond street, Bridgeport, that he expects to be sent home soon. Though he took a War Department three months to find Private Trapp and even now the adjutant is not certain what happened to the young soldier, as he reports him wounded, degree undetermined.

Private James Joseph Cassidy, thirty-one years old, of 1291 Alden street, was killed just one week before the armistice of the young soldier, was officially notified of his death last week. Private Cassidy had been previously reported missing by the War Department. A letter from him on October 23, giving details as to his injury and another under the same date, in which he said he hoped to sail soon.

Private Frank Parker, 1222 Point Breeze avenue, previously reported missing since September 28, is now declared by the War Department to have been severely wounded on that day. He is a member of a machine-gun company, 315th Infantry, and has been overseas since July. According to a letter received last week by his mother, Mrs. Harry Parker, he has recovered from his wounds and expects to sail for home soon. He failed to give any details as to his injuries. He is twenty-four and a widower with a child three years old, and is a blacksmith by trade.

FRENCH LOSSES 4,762,800

Of These 1,327,800 Were Killed, and 700,000 Disabled

Washington, Jan. 9.—Casualties in the French army, excluding Colonial troops, up to November 1 were 4,762,800, according to official figures made public by the French high commission to correct conflicting reports hitherto published. Men killed in action or dead of wounds numbered 1,327,800, and 700,000 were absolutely unable to work and have been pensioned. The losses among the native troops coming from French colonies or protectorates were 42,500 killed or died of wounds, with 15,000 missing and very probably dead.

And So They Were Married

Episode Three—(Jealousy) BY HAZEL DEYO BATCHELOR

CHAPTER II

"WELL, I suppose we're going to see a lot of Helen," Scott said that night as he perched himself on the top of the white-curtained washbasin while Ruth "was all round" as he called it, "with the dinner things."

Ruth held her face down to hide a sudden flush and then was angry with herself for doing it. Why should she feel embarrassed—why should she feel herself as a disadvantage? She opened the oven door and stooped down to turn the steak over. It sputtered angrily and the flame flared up brightly. When she straightened up she answered his partial question.

"Not as much as I had thought." "How's that? Anything wrong?" "No, but she is going to scold," Scott jumped down from his perch. "Good old Helen, that's fine. I'm tickled to death."

"Why should you be so glad? Helen doesn't have to work. It seems silly to me." "I think it's fine because she doesn't have to do anything. That's just the point. Besides, Helen would never be happy staying home and doing nothing after she has had such an exciting experience over there. Apropos of our talk the other night, here's the first example of the war's influence on the women."

Ruth was silent, and as she and Scott carried in the dishes for dinner she tried to analyze her thoughts and emotions. She felt angry and irritated, and yet why couldn't she agree with Scott that Helen was fine and that it was the best thing in the world for her and that she deserved all kinds of credit for it? Suddenly she knew why. Because she resented Helen's doing more than she herself was prepared to do. It was all right for these other women who had always lived different lives; these friends of Scott's, or women in the abstract whose pictures one saw in the magazines, or whose names one heard mentioned, but Helen was different. Helen was one of Ruth's closest friends; a girl who had been brought up in exactly the same way, Helen knew no more than she, Ruth, herself, did. Therefore, Helen's going into the field of business made Ruth feel almost guilty. Not that Scott loved her more if she became interested in some work outside of her home; she could not believe that, but he certainly approved of Helen in a far more enthusiastic manner than she thought necessary.

"Why are you so quiet, sweetheart?" Scott asked at dinner. "Nothing has happened today that you haven't told me of, has it?" "Not a thing." "What is it, then?" "Nothing, Scott, nothing at all, only that I sometimes think that I am not exactly the woman you thought I would be when you married me." Scott laughed at this. "What ever made you think of such a thing? Do I act as though I felt that way?" "No," Ruth said slowly. "What she wanted was to have Scott say something more about Helen, to give his views about her work. But she hesitated about saying anything more herself. She did not want Scott to think that she was envious of Helen. Of course she really wasn't, but that feeling of irritation persisted in spite of anything she could think to the contrary. It made her uncomfortable all through the evening. Ruth, in spite of the fact that she was modern enough, wanted to go along in a nicely grooved rut. She was absolutely contented for the present with what she had and she was completely satisfied with Scott; she loved him utterly and yet she had a vague idea that with all of this change, with the advent of the new woman which could no longer be ignored, Scott might not be satisfied with her, and womanlike, she could not understand why. It was the same old argument. "I'm satisfied, why left her?"

She even pulled away from him when he put his arm about her, as they stood together in the center of the living room, and he caught her back against him, burying his face in the softness of her throat.

For a moment she was satisfied. After all, she thought with a throbbing triumph, did men really know what they wanted? Certainly most of them wanted love in a woman more than they did companionship.

(Tomorrow, something hitherto unconsidered happens in Ruth's life.)
