

KADISH BURNED BY U. S. TROOPS

Americans Retire From Village on Archangel Front, Then Reoccupy It

JAPAN WITHDRAWS MEN

President Wilson May Recall Yankee Force From Siberia Soon

By the Associated Press
Archangel, Jan. 7 (delayed).—Activities were renewed by the American and Allied forces on the Kadish front yesterday.

According to incomplete reports to headquarters here, the Americans burned the village of Kadish, retired from it and then went forward and reoccupied the ruins.

Washington, Jan. 10.—Japan is moving her military forces in Siberia toward the coast, taking the position that the objects for which the joint Japanese-American expedition was dispatched to Siberia have been accomplished. These objects were to destroy enemy influences and to afford relief to the Czech-Slovak troops, which were attempting to reach Vladivostok for embarking for France.

It is said authoritatively that the enemy influences have been eliminated in Siberia, order has been restored and the Bolshevik obstacles to the departure of the Czech-Slovak troops, so that there is no further use for Japanese soldiers in the interior or the western part of Siberia.

Japan will maintain near the coast, however, military police forces as a guarantee of continued good order there on account of the contiguity to Japanese possessions, and also to assure the enjoyment by Japanese subjects and Koreans of their rights under treaties between Japan and Russia, which concern the conduct of Japanese fisheries in Russian waters.

The Japanese government is opposed to intervention in Russia, believing the Russians will work out their own destiny. Koi Hara, the Premier, was hostile to the dispatching of a Japanese expedition to Siberia which took place under the former ministry of General Terauchi, but Mr. Hara is determined to safeguard the vital interests of Japan, one of which is the prevention of disorders at Japan's doors and the invasion of Japan by Bolshevik agents.

In view of the Japanese action, it is considered possible that President Wilson in the near future will order the withdrawal of the American forces in Siberia, most of whom, however, it is understood, are now in Manchuria.

BILTMORE OSWALD The Diary of a Hapless Recruit

I fell out of my hammock

MARCH 17.—This spring weather is bringing the birds out in great quantities. They bloomed along the fence today like a Ziegfeld chorus on an outing. One girl carried on a coherent conversation with six different fellows at once and left each of them feeling that he alone had been singled out for her particular favor. As a matter of fact I was flirting with her all the time and I could tell by the very way she looked that she would have much rather been talking to me. Last week I had to convince mother that I was wearing my flannels; this week I had to convince her I still had them on. The only way to satisfy her, I suppose, is to appear before her publicly in them. Poor, dear mother, she told me she had written the doctor up here asking him not to squirt my arm full of those horrid little germs any more. She said I came from a good, clean family, and had tions around here that they complain when they don't get enough. We're shoving up into a fine body of men, our company commander told us this morning, and added, that if we continue to pick up cigarette butts several more weeks we'll be able to stack arms without dropping our guns. Eh, the goat, seems unwell today. I attribute his unfortunate condition to his constant and unrelenting efforts to keep the canteen clear of paper. The movies were great tonight. I saw Sidney Drew's left ear and a mole on the neck of a man in front of me.

March 21—A fellow in our bay asked last night how much an admiral's pay was a month and when he told him he yawned, turned over on his side and said, "Not enough." He added that he could pick up that much at a first-class parade any time. We all tightened our wrist watches. Been thinking at the blinker all evening. Can't make much sense out of it. The bloomin' thing is always two blinks ahead of me. It's all very nice, I dare say, but I'd much rather get my messages on scented pads. I got one today. She called me her "Great, big, cute little sailor boy." Those were her exact words. How clever she is. I'm going to marry her just as soon as I'm a junior lieutenant. She'll wait a year, anyway.

March 22—I made up verses to myself in my hammock last night. Perhaps I'll send some of them to the camp paper. It would be nice to see your stuff in print. Here's one of the poems:

The Unregenerate Sailor Man
I take my booze
I'm fond of the taste of rubber;
I oil my lard
With the grease of bear
Or else with a bull whale's blubber.

II
My dusky wife
Was a scribe of Sirlope
So I left her in single
And sailed away
At the break of day—
Since then I have widowed four.

III
Avant! Belay!
And slack-a-day
That I gazed in the eyes of beauty,
For in devious ways
Their innocent gaze
Has caused me much extra duty.

IV
I never get past
The jolly old man,
The skipper and I are quite chummy;
He knows me by sight
When I'm sober or tight
And calls me a "winked old rummy."

Next week I rate liberty! Ah, little book, I wonder what these pages will contain when I come back. I hate to think, New York, you know, is such an interesting place.

LIUT. W. E. STEPHENS DIES

Philadelphian, Surviving War Perils, Is Pneumonia Victim

Lieutenant William Earl Stephens, Company G, 109th Infantry, which was a unit of the famous Iron Division, battled throughout the great engagements of the American participation in the war, only to fall a victim of disease, according to advice reaching his parents, who reside at 13 North Sixty-second street, this city.

When the smoke of battle had lifted at Chateau-Thierry, at the Marne, at Vesle array at Sedan, Lieutenant Stephens was among "those present." On Thanksgiving Day, when his friends back in the States were celebrating victory, Lieutenant Stephens succumbed to an actual attack of pneumonia.

Because he wanted to get into the fighting in France at the earliest possible moment Stephens resigned a first lieutenancy in the signal corps in August of 1917. He enlisted in Company G, 109th Infantry, which was formerly the old First Regiment, N. G. P.

CONVICT CANADIAN RED

Three Years the Penalty for Possessing Inflammatory Literature

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 10.—Three years' imprisonment in Kingston, Ont., penitentiary, and a fine of $500 was the sentence imposed on Charles Watson, a former city policeman, convicted of having objectionable literature in his possession. The literature included a pamphlet entitled "The Red Terror," with which Toronto and other Ontario cities were recently flooded.

This circular, issued by a "provisional" soldiers and workmen's committee of Canada, urged returning soldiers and workers to take charge of all affairs of government and industry.
