The older composers, the editions were which is expended upon them now, and in their day exactitude of performance was not so strenuously insisted upon. Therefore it is probable that in many cases their works have been so edited by some one who had little or nothing to justify it except that somewhat nebulous musical element which is known as "tradition," that the original meaning or rather style which the composers left much That the older composers left much That the older composers left much to the performer is shown not only in the comparatively few marks they used to indicate how the music should be blaved but also in the feet of the music to indicate how the music should be played, but also in the fact that they seldom wrote solo cadenzas for their concertos, leaving the performer to pre-pare his own cadenza along the lines of playing which should best fit his partheular style of technique. Beginning with Beethoven, however, this changed and he was the first to works performed, although he did hot time on here has been an ever merein ng disposition on the part of the com-poser to show exactly what he wants. ular style of technique.

THEREFORE it would seem as though pretation might safely be considerably wider in the works of the older com-posers than in those of the older com-nothing except "tradition" to go on, and this is by no means a safe guide. In the later composers there is in meirly every case some competent musician who has heard the composer play his own works and can thus transmit an authentic ver-sion for the guidance of other players.

	What he did is a part of history now. And so, too, most unfortunately, is Roosevelt. His voice for preparedness, for military training, for efficiency in high places and for rightcousness is stilled forever. But his words shall not perish. For they are the words of an American citizen devoted to his country. Because of him, we have been led to higher ideals. The United States is better because he lived within its borders and was a citizen of it. A true American, a courageous American, a citizen of the purest Americanism, has fallen. A great nation will lament and will wish in all sincerity that he might have been spared.
