

5 SONS WOUNDED; FATHER LAID OFF

Parent of Heroes Loses Job at Frankford Arsenal LIST FOR CITY SMALL Nearly Half of These Are Corrections Made in Other Reports

With five of his fourteen children fighting for Uncle Sam and with all of them wounded at one time or another, Morris Knable, 1405 North Thirtieth street, has been laid off at the Frankford Arsenal, where he has been working as a machinist since this country declared war on Germany.

In order to take a part in the battle for democracy, Knable had to sell a business he had built up through many years of hard work. He was glad to be able to help the cause along, and never hesitated to make the sacrifice. His sons each allotted $10 a month of their pay, and with this amount his father, a mechanic, felt that he could support his family in comfort.

But he did not figure on the stupidity and delay in the War Department, for though his boys have been in the service of their country for nearly two years, their father has never received a cent of the money due him under the allotment agreement.

Lieutenant Joseph J. Knable, the oldest of the five sons, is twenty-three years old. He was wounded on November 11, a few hours before the armistice was signed. The young hero had been a member of the 104th Infantry for the last three years and with that unit at the Mexican border. He was with the 104th during the battles of Chateau Thierry, St. Mihiel and several other battles in which that famous regiment took part and escaped uninjured until an hour or two before hostilities ceased.

Sergeant Harry Knable, Company B, Fourth Infantry, was wounded in the early part of November. He is twenty-one years old and with his brother, George, eighteen years old, enlisted in the 104th Infantry, from which they were transferred to other regiments.

George was wounded on September 8 and has since been in the hospital. A letter to his parents he writes that he is on his way home, but cannot say when he will arrive.

Corporal Abraham Knable has been a member of the 110th Infantry for the last four years. He is twenty years old and was promoted during the Mexican border campaign. He was sent overseas in the early part of April, 1918, and was wounded on July 15, as a result of which one of his ribs was removed.

Sergeant Percy Knable, Company H, Seventh Cavalry, was gassed in the early part of September and has since been sent home and honorably discharged from the army. He is seventeen years old.

There are only 712 names on the combined casualty lists for yesterday and today, the smallest work-out total since last September. Of this number only eighty-one are from Pennsylvania, indicating that the toll of dead and wounded from this Commonwealth has been nearly completed.

The honor roll for Philadelphia and vicinity totals twenty-nine, nearly half of which are corrections of previous erroneous reports. Ten are named as killed in action, two as reported previously to be reported missing and one previously reported wounded.

SKETCHES OF THE HEROES Private Leonard J. Daily had been in the service of his country but four months when he was killed in France.

CHURCHES HONOR HERO DEAD

Memorial Services Held for Soldiers Who Fell in War Several churches held memorial services yesterday in honor of members who gave up their lives in service during the war.

Chestnut street, the street of streets, stands enshrined in the heart of every Philadelphian. The "Lure of the Elsewhere" casts no spell upon them. There is no wandering forth from the fold to unknown precincts; to this street alone do they respond, the trumpeting calls of other sirens falling upon deaf ears.

"LARGE heart ne'er loved a small cream pot," said Oliver Wendell Holmes, and you are sure he must have prescribed some of the beautiful Silver Tea Services, with fat capacities cream pots, that today are to be had at Bailey, Banks & Biddle Company.

WHERE is the man or woman who will admit they are daily practicing self-denial that our allies may be fed? Each and all pretend it is no concern of theirs, yet the 20,000,000 of the world are pleading for food.

CABISTAN and Daghestan rugs are so similar that one description fits the other, and there is no doubt that the first were they called Cabistan, the latter were they called Daghestan.

WITH snow in the air and blizzards in the background, it seems a strange time to think of new cotton materials, but every woman knows that the prettiest and choicest apparel now, and the wisest, is to be had in the form of the charming assortment at Joseph G. Darlin, on & Co., 1126-28 Chestnut street.

"MUSIC is not merely a study, it is an entertainment; wherever there is music there is a throng of listeners." When those words were written many years ago music in this country was not within reach of every one.

SOCIALLY this is a very gay season, and more and more gowns being required. At Oppenheim, Collins & Co., Chestnut and Twelfth streets, there are many beautiful evening and dinner dresses on view.

Miller and Privates James Ross and William Gardner, The War Greenery, conducted the church, conducted the memorial service.

An Endless Chain of Good Service

A few weeks ago a gentleman who was a stranger to us made a purchase of Men's Furnishing Goods and was asked to look over our line of clothing. He did so and was so well pleased that he bought a suit and overcoat.

To keep the story plain, we will call the man Mr. "A." In a few days he introduced his friend, Mr. "B," who purchased liberally in both departments.

Shortly afterward Mr. "B" brought Mr. "C," who also invested in Reed's good merchandise, and subsequently brought Mr. "D," who did likewise.

And the End Is Not Yet. The Moral: Messrs. A., B., C. and D. were treated well. They were sold good merchandise, they were not overcharged, and they are building an endless chain of business for-
