Assembly Calendars Jammed With Legislation Already Passed Once

Harrisburg, March 2. - From the standpoint of the number of bills that will be introduced in the Legislature tonight, the Senate and the House will have important sessions. The calendars of both houses, however, offer little in the way of blg legislation, the Senate calendar being made up entirely of sec-ond-reading measures and the House calendar containing only four bills on third reading, four on third reading postand four on final reading post-

If the proposed amendment is made to extend the provisions of this bill to include all cities of the state so that the Philadelphia Transit bonds can be used for some other purpose, it will have to be offered when the bill is called up.

Three members of the State Senata will take the oath of office during the week. They are Richard J. Raldwin, elected to succeed Governor Sproul as Senator from Delaware County, and Frank A. Will Continue Volunteer Folice

The proposed commission will continue the volunteer police system and cooperate with women's auxiliaries that will work in the various counities for the bringing about of hetter conditions during the after-the-war period.

Americanization work will be a big feature of the plans when they are fully developed, and the commission will assist in the work of instilling patriotism among the foreign-horn residents of the state.

At the present time, declared Captain Souder, the detective bureau relies on its ability to borrow cars from other city departments when motor vehicles are needed in its work. The bureau now does not have a single automobile of its own, he said, while other city departments are provided with cars they do not need.

The same thing holds good with a group of highwaymen who also use a machine. The chauffeur drives carefully up behind his unsuspecting victim who is walking on the streets and then several of them jump out, knock him down and rob him. In the twinkling of an eye they have disappeared. What chance has a policeman with a gang of crooks like this?"

The Standard Seven-Passenger Car of the United States Army

When President Wilson and the other American delegates to the Peace Conference stepped on European soil, they found awaiting them a dozen standard Cadillac limousines, which had been shipped to France by special order for their use.

When the President and his party returned to this country, it was in Cadillac touring cars that they made the journey through the streets of Boston.

It was fitting that the American automobile whose exceptional performance in the war zone had won for it a distinguished decoration-its official appointment by the Government as the Standard Seven-Passenger Car of the United States Armyshould play a prominent part in the peace deliberations which were hastened by the exploits of the American Army.

Owners of Cadillac cars have now the additional source of pride that the car of their choice was also the choice of the United States Army.
