The Victoria will show the first pic-turization of "The Better "Ole," which just closed a successful engagement as a stage play in this city, the week commencing March 24. The picture shows the British army in trenches, dugouts and behind the lines. It portrays the humor of the great war, but is not overdrawn. A plot has been used—just enough to make the audience makes BROAD—"The Marquis of Priola," by Henri Lavedan, adopted from the French by Leo Ditrichstein, who plays LAURETTE TAYLOR'S STRUGGLE enough to make the audience wonder what is going to happen next. There was once a time in Laurette the stage play in London.

There was once a time in Laurette stage play in London.

Always Easy

There was once a time in Laurette Taylor's "melodramatic past," as she calls it, when as leading woman of a stock company in Seattle she was obliged to furnish a change of wardrobe for the Sunday night change of bill on a hypothetical salary of $40 a week. Some weeks there would be no salary, but the change of wardrobe was as imperative as the change of bill. She used to get around the difficulty sometimes by buying a white dress and having it dyed pink for the second week, dark green for the third and black for the fourth.

All this by way of pointing out that she went through a period of bardship and inconvenience, of struggles and grind and fight such as few actresses have been obliged to pass.

It is interesting to note that until the present tour in "Happiness" Migs Taylor had not played Chicago nor Boston in eight years except with the all-star tour of Out There," for the benefit of fact, she has played hardly any place in this country except New York and Philadelphis since she first flashed into fame five years ago last December in "Peg o' My Heart."

The screen production was made by the company which originally presented the stage play in London.

For an actor to make himself up so that he presents a striking resemblance to some motion-picture star is no small achievement. If it were easy there would be different editions of all the present stars applying for work every day, convinced that if they can look like a star they, too, may be stars. But each individual star has some trick of personality, or something his own that no other playet who doubles him has. In "Alias Mike Moran," starring Wallace Reld, next week at the Arcadia, Emory Johnson-makes up so nearly like my presented the stage play in London.

NICKERBOCKE D Market Near 40th St. "Lombardi, Ltd.," will be seen at the Lyric, following "Ladles First." This amusing play, by the Hattons, with its mixture of romance, light comedy and seamy-sided drama, has served admirably to introduce Leo Carillo as a star.
