

Yesterday's Spring-like Sunshine and Warmth Pictorially Portrayed by the Camera-man

THE KNITTER in the sun and the younger generation in a white coach, quite indisputable proof that balmy breezes are wafted through the park.

ONE OF THE EARLIEST incontestable signs of the coming of spring is the appearance of the sunbathers in the public squares. The park benches were in demand yesterday. They were excellent vantage points to watch leisurely the world go by or to peruse, perhaps, the newspaper that some one has left behind.

THREE YOUNG FISHERMEN—and a bottle of wiggling bait—who felt the first call of springtime and hurried to the river's bank to test their angling luck.

THIS YOUNG LADY is carrying her fur neckpiece—but yesterday was almost summer enough to wear it.

WITH THE MERCURY touching 73 degrees, winter overcoats were excess luggage on Chestnut street yesterday.

READY TO WAIT ON hundreds of soldiers, sailors and marines at the Benedict Service Club, 1919 Market street, formally opened by the National Catholic War Council on Sunday. The store building in which the club is situated consists of five floors, three of which are used as dormitories. On the first floor is a cafeteria. The second floor is used as a recreation hall.

A PATRIOTIC son of Erin. Joseph J. Conley, with his American and Irish flags and trumpet, celebrating St. Patrick's Day—trumpeting a salute to the Barry statue in Independence Square.
